She was only a city sparrow and had very few friends. She couldn't make much of a success in the metropolis. She longed to read her name in electric lights and the columns of the papers. But she was only a mediocrity—a dancer in a cabaret. Then misfortune came and her sorrow seemed complete. A chance came to go to the country and forget the sordidness of her life. This is the brief outline of "A City Sparrow," the Ethel Clayton picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is a picture which is filled with human touches and considerable humor. A picture which should appeal to every one. Walter Hiers and Clyde Fillmore are in the cast.

SUGGESTIONS

The best bet about this picture is the exploiting of the star's name. Play her up big and play up the title. It is catchy and will appeal to the imagination. Tell that the picture is an account of theatrical life in the big city and all the color which accompanies it. Bring out that the story is well emphaszed with such elements as heart interest, sentiment, love interest, humor and pathos. Don't give the plot away. It is a very simple tale and those looking for drama will be apt to be disappointed if they read it in the synopsis. So concentrate mostly upon the star. Tell that she always gives a good performance. Mention that Walter Hiers and Clyde Fillmore appear in the cast. Your steady fans will remember their names.

CATCH LINES

She was only a city sparrow in the sordid life of the city. Then a chance came for her to fly to the country. See "A City Sparrow" with Ethel Clayton.

"THE IRON RIDER"
(Fox)

Below William Russell's Previous Work; Only Slightly Interesting

THIS production appears below the two previous pictures of this star. This is largely due to the development of the story, which makes it a somewhat unreasonable tale intended to create action and a bit of mystery. The star has little chance to make any impression. The suspense is fairly well kept up and there is plenty of action. There are no unusual thrills.

The story is laid in a Western town, where disorder is rampant because of an unjust sheriff. Russell, playing a lumber foreman, Lannigan by name, is aroused by the corruption of justice. So he joins "The Iron Riders," a society which flourished thirty years before. Its members wear black gowns and take the law into their own hands when the authorities fail to preserve order.

The band being now extinct, Lannigan is its only member. As two witnesses are about to perjure themselves at a trial for murder, the Iron Rider holds up the court room at the point of his revolver and forces them to tell the truth. The villain then takes advantage of the disguise by covering himself with black and closing the village saloon on Sunday, robbing the cash register at the same time. Public feeling is thus aroused against the Iron Rider and Lannigan's own father, incensed that his son should use the secret society for an unjust end, leads the hunt. Lannigan is found, and, as the real robber is the father of the girl he loves, cannot reveal the truth. His own father attempts to force him to commit suicide. But Lannigan escapes, flees the town, and is accused of murder. The climax comes with the rescue of the girl from the hands of another villain, and a fairly exciting fight in the water.

Vola Vale, as the leading woman, has no very distinctive part. That there is drama in Frank Packard's story, there is no doubt, but its development does not make the most of its basic material. The star gets as much out of the part as possible. George Nicholls as Lannigan's father is crude in places.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Russell, the popular Fox star, will play the stellar role in "The Iron Rider," his latest screen production, which will be shown at the ———— theatre on ————. Russell is known as one of the most daring and virile stars of the screen today and his work both in his previous farces and in his more recent dramas which included "The Man Who Dared" and "The Challenge of the Law" are well remembered.

"The Iron Rider" is a story of the West which fits the peculiar personality of this popular young actor. He plays the part of a foreman in a lumber camp in a Western town, where disorder is rampant. In an effort to do away with lawlessness and to restore once more justice and peace in the community, this young man joins "The Iron Riders," a secret society which was in vogue thirty years before, and which was dedicated to the preservation of justice in the face of lawless and unprincipled men.

There is a strong romance in "The Iron Rider." Vola Vale is the leading woman, and a strong supporting cast is shown in the picture. This picture will be shown for ———— days and is expected to prove the most popular of any of William Russell's productions. It was directed by Scott Dunlap. The story is by Frank L. Packard.

PROGRAM READER

William Russell's latest and best picture, "The Iron Rider," will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Patrons of the ———— will remember the star for his work in "The Challenge of the Law" and "The Man Who Dared," two productions which pleased and delighted them at this theatre not so long ago. Russell is the kind of man whom the American public likes to see on the screen. He is handsome without being effeminate. His virile personality and the daring that he displays in all his pictures have won him many friends. "The Iron Rider" is a picture well suited to his abilities. It is a story of the West, replete with thrilling moments and action. The romance is not neglected, and pretty Vola Vale plays the leading feminine role opposite the star. "The Iron Rider will be shown for ———— days.

SUGGESTIONS

William Russell has been placed now among the fairly well known stars of the screen. You should appeal to his following, and, if you have shown "The Man Who Dared" or "The Challenge of the Law," they should be mentioned. Photographs of him in the lobby will be attractive. The central figure of the picture is a man who wears a black gown covering his face and entire body. You can have a man so dressed in your lobby, or one riding through the streets with the sign, "The Iron Rider" on his back. Teaser campaigns are possible. One might read, "Who is the Mysterious Rider?" Promise thrills, action, mystery and romance in your copy. Frank L. Packard, the author, also wrote "The Miracle Man."

A story of the new West and how it sought to revert to the lawless pioneer days, and how it was prevented from so doing.

Who was the mysterious man in black who rode to the court house fully armed to see that justice was done?

"PAGAN LOVE"
(Ballin-Hodkinson)

Magazine Story Developed Into Mediocre Picture

DRAGGING slowly along at a snail's pace in the beginning, and filled with irrelevent detail, "Pagan Love," adapted from the magazine story, "The Honourable Gentleman," by Achmed Abdullah, does not hit a high mark as screen entertainment, despite some excellent photography and lighting.

Briefly the story is that of a Chinaman who is sent to America by his clan to serve the interests of New China, and who falls in love with an American girl. The girl is blind and when an operation restores her sight, the face of her Oriental sweetheart is repulsive to her. So he nobly keeps his identity a secret, returns to his native land and commits suicide. There is only one other eligible male in the picture for the blind girl to love, and a romance between them is hinted at in the end.

This tale moves along with a Chinese fairy tale interpolated, as well as a football scene which appears almost childish. There are also a number of details intended as human interest touches, which hinder the continuity. Only in the end is there some excitement found. Tsing Yu-Ch'ing, the hero, has been in some vague way, unfaithful to the trust of his clan, because of his love for the girl. This, strange to say, is a motive for murder, and the lover sets out to kill the girl he loves. He fails in his mission, of course, and a member of the clan is sent to destroy him. This killer's method of killing is to jump on the hero's back. Considering that the would-be assassin is of very small build, it is a strained manner of forcing a thrilling fight.

Mabel Ballin plays the part of the blind girl. She does well in the beginning, but the change when she regains her sight is not as noticeable as it might be. Togo Yamamoto is not very impressive in his role. He falls far short of the work of Hayakawa in similar roles. There are some artistic Oriental interiors.

"Pagan Love' fails to convince by its logic as well as being slow moving. The conflict between love and duty must be explained by a sub-title, for what the hero's duty is and the strength of its claims upon him, is never made quite clear. The picture's title is its best asset. It is all perfectly clean and inoffensive.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A popular magazine story has been picturized and will be shown at the———— theatre on ————. It is "Pagan Love" and is an adaption of "The Honourable Gentleman," a story by Achmed Abdullah which appeared in The Pictorial Review.

"Pagan Love" is interpreted by a capable cast, among whom are Mabel Ballin, Rockliffe Fellowes and Togo Yamamoto. In its screen version it has all the interest and zest for which the writings of this popular author are noted. It is surrounded by the atmosphere of the mysterious Orient, contrasted with modern America. It shows the struggle of New China against the old customs of another age and century.

The hero is a young Chinese patriot who is sent to this country to bring the wisdom of the West back to his native land. Graduating from an American college, he lives in New York's Chinatown, striving to elevate his fellow countrymen by publishing a magazine. He continues to serve his beloved China even when it means the sacrificing of the girl he has learned to love.

"Pagan Love" will be that attraction at the————theatre for———— days. Enacted by a capable cast, and filled with interesting situations, it is expected to be one of the best liked pictures of recent date.

PROGRAM READER

From a different land and of another century was Tsing Yu-Ching, the Chinaman. Sent to America to bring the learning and wisdom of the West back to his native land, he found himself in strange and new surroundings. But in all countries there is one language that is always the same. The Americanized young Oriental found in the sightless eyes of the lonely blind girl, the answer to his search for love. And she loved him, for she saw him in her mind only, and she knew him as the kind and thoughtful man who brought some cheer into her melancholy existence. But when sight returned and she saw the yellow, wrinkled skin, the narrow, slanting eyes, and the wide nostrils—could she love him then?

"Pagan Love," an adaption of the story by Achmed Abdullah, will prove to be one of the most interesting pictures you have ever seen. It will be shown at the———— theatre on————

SUGGESTIONS

You will have to go the limit in boosting Achmed Abdullah, the author, and his story in this one. Try to wring into your copy a bit of the old Chinese atmosphere and state that it is a tale of the Old and New World closely intertwined. New York's Chinatown is an attractive setting for a picture. The production is full of incense burning and you can use some in your lobby. Stage settings to create the Oriental spirit of the play should be used. They can be made simple or elaborate, as you wish. Your ushers can dress in Chinese costumes.

CATCH LINES

A young Chinese loved a Christian maid, and she loved him. But must be that "East is East and West is West and never the twain shall meet?" See "Pagan Love" at the———— theatre on————

An all-star production of one of the most fascinating tales of fascinating China ever written. From the magazine story by Achmed Abdullah.

"THE GREAT LOVER"
(Goldwyn)

Slow Moving Drama That Depends Largely on Titles

LEO DITRICHSTEIN made the title role of "The Great Lover" a most unique, whimsical and even lovable character and the speaking lines the authors of the play gave him were cleverly constructed satiric observations that fitted well with the personality portrayed, a vain egotistical artist whose professional life as a singer had been one round of love affairs.

Without Ditrichstein and minus the speaking lines, what is left of "The Great Lover" is an idea that does not furnish any great picture opportunities and one that has been used in at least two instances, by Lew Cody in "The Beloved Cheater," and Crane Wilbur some years ago in a Mutual picture to better advantage than in the present case.

Goldwyn's "The Great Lover" is a slow moving drama that depends entirely on titles to tell its story, and all the money that has very evidently been spent in producing it will not make up for the lack of action and the many sequences where characters walk into a set, only to talk to each other, while titles explain what is happening.

The cast headed by John Sainpolis as the great lover is carefully selected as to types. No fault can be found with their work. The producer has been lavish in his production. Some big and expensive sets have been required and provided. The direction technically is first class. The continuity is quite as good, but still you will have to be able to read quickly to find out what the offering is about and that doesn't make a good picture with the average of any audience. The great shame is that so much time, money and effort was expended on an idea that provided so little opportunity for results. As a box office attraction we are inclined to think that the fame of the Hatton play means little outside the largest cities.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Ethel ..... Claire Adams
Sonino ..... John Davidson
Bianca ..... Alice Hollister
Impressario ..... Lionel Belmore

Adapted from the Cohan and Harris stage play of the same name. Directed by Frank Lloyd.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The unique character which Leo Ditrichstein brought to the stage in the Cohan and Harris comedy, "The Great Lover," written by Frederick and Fanny Hatton, has been transferred to the screen with John Sainpolis in the leading role and will be the attraction at the———— theatre for a———— days' engagement beginning————.

It is a whimsical and unique idea that the Hattons conceived for their play and one which the fans who appreciate the different story will thoroughly enjoy. How the "great lover" goes on his way breaking hearts, never with malicious intent and many times sincerely in love until his voice fails and his own son becomes his successor on the operatic stage and his rival for the hand of a fair maiden, makes an interesting picture. To see it is to see one of the real stage classics intelligently brought to the silver sheet. To miss it is to miss a rare dramatic treat.

PROGRAM READER

"The Great Lover," famous as one of the few real stage hits of recent years, written by Frederick and Fanny Hatton and enacted by a cast headed by Leo Ditrichstein, has been adapted by Goldwyn to the silver sheet and will be the feature picture offered on the———— bill for a————days' engagement beginning———— — —.

The part of the great lover in the picture version is played by John Sainpolis, with Claire Adams and John Davidson in the roles of the juvenile sweethearts whose happiness is threatened by the great singer.

The story of "The Great Lover" is one of the most unique and interesting that has ever been brought to the silver sheet. It tells of the love affairs of a noted operatic baritone who goes on and on breaking hearts, never maliciously or with evil intent, until the time comes when his voice fails and he finds himself beaten in the game of love and supplanted in his art by his own son. What happens and the way he receives his double defeat makes much real drama and presents a character that is rarely duplicated either on the stage or in pictures.

SUGGESTIONS

In exploiting this picture we would bend all our energies to getting the attention of the people who have a respect for the fame of the play and a knowledge of the art of Mr. Ditrichstein, into the theatre. For the ordinary fan the suggestion that something spicy might be forthcoming would probably get some business if you don't object to these methods. Some attention to the cast, which may well be labeled all star, is probably advisable.

CATCH LINES

A great play, one that held a stage on Broadway for a record run, transferred to the screen with all its originality and uniqueness.

Adapted from the stage success of the same name by Frederick and Fanny Hatton, enacted in the leading role by Leo Ditrichstein and sponsored by Cohan and Harris for a full year on Broadway.

A picture that tells of the love affairs of a great operatic singer, who finally was outstripped both as a lover and as an artist by his own son.

An attraction for those who complain that the silver sheet presents nothing new in plot and story.

"RISKY BUSINESS"
(Universal)

GLADY'S WALTON'S latest starring vehicle affords her many opportunities to display her unique talents. Although the story as a whole is of the average variety, her personality sticks out in such a way that one is bound to admire her charms which radiate even in scenes that are common place.

In pushing this young woman to the fore, Universal has the right idea in surrounding her with a good cast and capable direction.

As far as the story is concerned, the star's value to the screen at the present time relies more on her personal charms and her ability to play "ingenue leads" than in the creation of stronger roles.

In "Risky Business," Miss Walton "gets in" many sure-fire bits of business. She does a specialty dance in a "masked ball" scene appearing in ballet costume which is deserving of mention and does not hesitate to dive and swim in the ocean when the scenario calls for it.

At another time her running against the villain in a hoydenish manner as he is standing on the edge of a pool of water and forcing him into it caused much laughter among a Broadway audience.

The production is rich in exterior and interior settings which act as a splendid background for the players. It has an even continuity reaching its climax in a decisive manner.

The latter scenes are staged aboard a yacht in which hero, heroine and villain engage in a "lifelike" battle for supremacy.

Among the prominent players in the cast are Lillian Lawrence, who was well known some few years back as a stock leading woman, Louis Willoughby, Fred Malatesta and Maude Wayne.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Gladys Walton in her latest Universal feature, "Risky Business," will be the attraction at———— theatre on————of next————

The story is by Douglas Doty and John Colton and is said to afford Miss Walton more opportunities to display her unique talents than any of her previous hits.

The picture has a very even continuity, is strong in dramatic moments and develops to a strong climax in which hero, heroine and villain "battle" aboard a yacht for supremacy.

The production is rich in exterior and interior settings which act as a splendid background for the players among whom are Louis Willoughby who plays the leading role, and who is called upon to perform many difficult and daring "stunts;" Fred Malatesta, one of the best known "villains" on the screen; Lillian Lawrence, well known as a leading women in some of the best stock companies through the country some few years back, and Maude Wayne.

The story tells of a mischievous young woman who unwittingly acts as a confederate to a modern society Raffles who is "not so bad" after all; how her trust in his honor saves her from a scoundrel's clutch, who has determined to "get" her sister and being foiled in his plans because our young heroine locks her sister in a room and goes to meet the bad man alone, determines to wreck his vengeance upon the latter, and how after several incipient love affairs our heroine decides she loves her Raffles best, because of his manly traits.

PROGRAM READER

She did not know the man very well, but when she saw that he was making love to her sister her suspicions were arroused and she believed that he was not honorable. One day when he was talking with her sister at the edge of a pool of water she saw her advantage and before she knew it she had thrown him into it.

As he emerged he vowed vengeance. Did he get it? Well, we'll say he tried hard enough.

This situation is only one of the many ludicrous happenings which appear in "Risky Business," the latest Universal production, starring Gladys Walton.

How she saved her sister from dishonor, and how she fell in love with a modern society Raffles who is "not so bad" after all, for when the critical moment arrives he risks his life in a fierce battle with the villain that our heroine may be saved from the bad man's clutches.

The feature is well produced and affords Miss Walton many opportunities to display her unique talents.

In the cast are Lillian Lawrence, Maude Wayne, Louise Willoughby, Fred Malatesta, Nanine Wright, Frank McKay, John Gough and Fred Andrews.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a good average program picture which should hold its own on any bill and give satisfaction. The picture should especially appeal to the women folks, for the star, Gladys Walton, is one of the prettiest ingenues upon the screen and is an adapt in playing these roles. She also possesses a certain amount of agility which carries her through many difficult and exciting situations.

In your exploitation play the star up as strongly as you can for she can stand it. Tell your patrons that her personal magnetism is bound to charm them and that the scenario calls for a combination physical and mental ability.

Although the story is only of the average variety, it is well directed and produced has an even continuity and develops to a strong climax.

If you care to you might play up the fight between hero, heroine and villain on board the yacht, for it is very lifelike and thrilling. The battle belongs to the villain, but the tide turns when heroine grabs a bottle and hits him on the head.

CATCH LINES

He loved her and yet he felt that he must leave her. Why? See Gladys Walton in her latest Universal feature, "Risky Business," it will tell you.

Why did the young society girl fall in love with a modern Raffles? See "Risky Business," with Gladys Walton as the star. It will tell you.

Did she purposely give the villain a ducking in the pool or was it accidental? Let Gladys Walton tell you in "Risky Business."

"THE LITTLE 'FRAID LADY"
(Robertson-Cole)

Mae Marsh Returns to Screen, Ideally Cast

IT has remained for Director John G. Adolfi to discover and give to the screen the Mae Marsh whom D. W. Griffith first presented to an applauding world of "fans." Miss Marsh is a thorough little artiste, of course, but one of the rare sort who must be sympathetically handled, and given the sort of material in which her quaint, elfish personality may score. And Adolfi has done it in this screen version of Marjorie Benton Cooke's "The Girl Who Lived in the Woods."

The story, as revised and adapted to the screen by Joseph W. Farnham, is an ideal one. The plot is closely woven, the incidents that occur have some direct bearing on the story itself, and there are no wanderings, or ramblings, away from the plot itself. Everything that does not bear directly on the plot with its really smashing climax, has been torn away.

The location of the story, in the country of the big pines, was a clever one, for the shining aisles of sunlights through columns of lofty trees, the tiny log "cabin" perched on the bank of the lake, the Judge's big, "rustic" home, and the quite different, but equally as attractive home of Saxton Graves, all offers a pleasing change from the usual city streets, and overwhelming "impressive" "society scenes." Yet, later in the story, when a perfectly logical development of the plot, brings all the leading characters to a massive ball being given in the Artists Quarter of the big city, there is enough of this "impressive" stuff to please those who demand it.

The cast is a splendid one. Charles Meredith is very young, and very likable as Saxton Graves, an interior decorator; Herbert Prior lends just the right shade of dignity and humor to the role of Judge Peter Carteret; Tully Marshall carries off the "heavy" role of C. Giron with his usual aplomb and wickedness; and Kathleen Kirkham is beautiful and appealing as Saxton's widowed sister. The list of the cast would be sadly incomplete were one to forget "Bobby," the small son of Helen, played by George Bertholon, Jr., and a beautiful bull-dog, truly an aristocrat of dogdom, Jacques III, who plays "Omar," the adored "pal" of "the little 'fraid lady."

The whole picture is one to bank on, and people who have been anxiously awaiting the return to the screen of Mae Marsh will be thoroughly and completely satisfied with it—Length, 6 reels.—Reviewed by Pearl Gaddis, at Atlanta, Ga.

PROGRAM COPY—READER

Mae Marsh's return to the screen is brilliantly heralded in "The Little 'Fraid Lady," an appealing screen version of Marjorie Benton Cooke's "The Girl Who Lived in the Woods," which comes to the———— theatre, beginning————.

It is the story of a girl, Cecilia Carne, who had been bitterly disillusioned in the big city and who had fled to a lonely little log-lodge, far in the woods, on the banks of a beautiful lake. Her only company and chosen pal was Omar, a beautiful bull-dog. When other people came to live in the woods, and disturbed her privacy, she was angry and resentful. But her belligerent attitude which was merely a cloak to hide her bruised heart from the world.

It's a pretty story, and an intensely interesting one. Don't miss it.

PROGRAM COPY—BRIEF NOTICE

She was all alone, and she lived in the woods. Much to her disgust, other people came into the woods and spoiled her solitude. What though one of them was young and good-looking, and fell in love with her at first sight? What though the other was middle-aged and kind, and who treated her like a favored daughter? She had been brutally disillusioned, and her spirit lacerated by an unworthy father. But see what happened then—"The Little 'Fraid Lady," at the———— theatre beginning————.

CATCH LINES

She was young and pretty and altogether attractive—but she ran away and hid when strangers came. But he—well, that was different, for of course, he was different. And what girl can put up bolts and bars that will keep out love? Cecilia Carne couldn't and it nearly brought her death. See "The Little 'Fraid Lady" at the———— theatre, beginning————.

Production Enlarged by Morris Schlank

Morris Schlank, who for the past eighteen months has been making two-reel Hank-Mann comedies for Arrow Film Corporation distribution, has completed plans for greatly enlarging his producing activities and by the 1st of December will have at least three companies actively engaged in the making of films in a new studio now being built on Beachwood Drive, near the Francis Ford Studio, where the present Schlank productions are made.

The additional producing units will devote their time to the making of five-reel western dramas, and another unit making two-reel Slapstick comedies.

Educational Tie-Up is Arranged on Serial

J. Eugene Pearce, head of Pearce Films of New Orleans has arranged a tie-up with the public schools of Louisiana and Mississippi on "The Invisible Ray," according to Joan. A series of illustrated leaflets on the scientific data contained in "The Invisible Ray" is being drawn up to be distributed to school children.

William Crowell, who has seen in the part of the young Chink opposite Lenore Ulrich in Belasco's "The Sun Daughter," will be seen on the screen in a similar role when Photo Products Export Company's six-reel Chinese melodrama, "Beyond the Great Wall," is released on the state rights' market. A. B. Heath directed and Howard Greene photographed. The picture was edited and titled by Joseph L. Kelley.

Who Makes "Movie Chats

Urban Answers Inquires: F. Percy Smith, of England, Their Author

IN answer to many questions which Mr. Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America, is receiving in reference to the Charles Urban Movie Chats which are being shown at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres in New York, it is stated that these pictures come from within Mr. Urban's own organization.

Their chief author and originator is F. Percy Smith, who is still a resident of England. He is a young man, hardly more than 30, though he has been doing this sort of work for about 15 years and always for Mr. Urban. His picture is more familiar than his name, for he oftens appears in his own subjects before the camera. He is the youngish man who is often seen poking the insects or handling the microscope or otherwise having to do with the material that is being filmed.

Mr. Smith has been connected with British educational societies for many years and has always linked up his work with Mr. Urban in the films. He began work in pictures when Mr. Urban was still in Urbanora House in London. Now the headquarters of the Urban organization is in New York, but this has not diminished the supply of the Smith films. He has resisted all inducements to come to America.

"I am afraid my educational achievements will not make a very formidable list," said Mr. Smith, "as most of my work has been deadly scientific rather than popular (I mean apart from film work). . . . I have published a dozen or more highly technical treaties on nature subjects in the journals of learned societies, lectured exceedingly on the same subjects and edited for six years the Journal of the Quekett Microscopical Club — a publication with a world-wide reputation among microscopists. . . ."

The films he makes will continue to be a feature of the Urban Popular Classics for a long time to come.

Kremer Planning Specials

Independent Producer Has Big Plans: Texas Guinan Starts Soon

VICTOR KREMER, president of Victor Kremer Feature Films, Inc., announces that in addition to the series of Texas Guinan Westerns which he recently announced to the trade, he will make four super-features. Mr. Kremer announces no further details concerning these specials.

Miss Guinan, it is stated, will soon start production on the first of her Westerns for Victor Kremer, and has been assured the support of an all-star cast of players. Miss Guinan will make her debut under the Kremer banner in "Daredevil Kate," a story that, it is claimed, will allow her every opportunity to display her ability as a horsewoman. "The Guinan series of Westerns," states the Kremer office, "will be a departure from those that are now being made. While they will be Western in atmosphere with all the excitement and thrills that must necessarily be injected into such productions, they will be on a higher plane, combining Western range life with that of society. It will present Miss Guinan in a role that is distinctively new to the screen.

"The scenarios for the Guinan productions will be written by well-known authors, whose works have met with the approval of fandom in general. The direction will be taken care of by one of the foremost directors of Western dramas. He has already been selected, but for important reasons his identity is being carefully guarded by Mr. Kremer. This director is at work on his last production for one of the leading program companies, and as soon as his contract with this corporation has expired, his name will be announced."

Frances Harks in Cast of C. B. C. Western

Frances Harks, who will be remembered in many prominent parts with D. W. Griffith for several years has been added to the cast in one of the Star Ranch Westerns now being made for the series of two reel Westerns offered State Rights' Buyers by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York.

Jawitz Pictures Corp. Is Organized

Announcement is made this week of the formation of the Jawitz Pictures Corporation, capitalized at Albany for $50,000. Charles N. Jawitz, for a long time identified with the motion picture business as an independent producer and distributor is sponsor for the new organization, which it is stated will confine its activities to the production and marketing of high grade independent offerings for the state rights buyer.

The new company, which has taken temporary offices in the Godfrey Building, at 729 7th Avenue, New York, will not in any way interfere with Mr. Jawitz' other activities in the independent field. Plans are at present under way by the Jawitz Pictures Corporation for the acquisition of several big independent productions.

TYLER THEATRE (40) PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Jules Burnstein, who has been retained as special sales representative by the Canyon Pictures Corporation, is now on the first leg of a country-wide sales trip which will bring him to every important exchange center of the United States and Canada.

The list of pictures which Mr. Burnstein will present to the independent buyer includes Franklyn Farnum in "The Galloping Devil," "The Struggle," "The Hunger of the Blood" and "The Fighting Stranger." These pictures are the first four of the six five-reel features which Colonel William N. Selig is making for the Canyon Pictures Corporation at his studio in Los Angeles.

Mr. Burnstein will also offer Mr. Farnum in the serial "Vanishing Trails" in all the territories which as yet remain unsold.

New Hallroom Negative Arrives in New York

The negative of "Hired and Fired," the first release of the new series of the Hallroom Boys comedies has just been received from Harry Cohn in charge of productions on the coast, by Jack Cohn, of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York, who is busy cutting and titling the picture for release, Nov. 15.

"State-rights' buyers report that the most representative houses in their territories are booking the comedies to their limit," states Mr. Cohn. "I think the best proof of whether a picture is going across big is when contracts for the picture come piling in.

First Legend Picture

"A Million—More Or Less" is the first special two-reel high-class comedy featuring Edna Shipman and John Junior to be completed by Legend Film Productions, Inc.

It was scenarioized by Treve Collins, Jr., from his story, "A Million Dollars Worth Of Solitude," and directed by Tefft Johnson.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Pathe pictures showing the unveiling of the Vanderbilt memorial tablet at the entrance to the National Forest and Game Preserve and of the Western North Carolina Apple Show are being shown in Asheville, N. C., this week. These pictures will be shown in Asheville first and then will be exhibited all over the United States. They are attracting huge crowds to the Asheville movie houses this week.

matter of fact the business for the first two weeks has been all that could be asked.

Liberty Hall is well adapted to moving pictures and the management proposes to put on programs that will be in keeping with the place, giving their patrons the latest and best pictures available. While contracts have not yet been made Manager Marshall states that it is his purpose to put on both Paramount and First National pictures.

A fireproof booth has been installed in full compliance with the state laws and it is equipped with a Motiograph machine.

For the purpose of constructing, manufacturing and operating motion picture theatres, etc., Caldwell, Inc., has been organized at Hamlet, N. C., with a capital stock of $100,000. The incorporators are E. Fish Caldwell, of Pinehurst, N. C.; Nora C. Carrington, of Hopewell, Va., and R. B. Caldwell, of Hamlet, N. C.

The local Woman's Auxiliary of the Community Club of Spartanburg, S. C., has been corresponding with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation with a view to "improving the moral tone" of motion pictures exhibited in this city. George N. Shorey has addressed a letter to the chairman of the Recreation Department of the auxiliary, Mrs. C. K. Earl, in which Mr. Shorey conveys the thanks of Mr. Jesse Lasky, the vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky organization, for the interest displayed in the matter. Mr. Lasky is also quoted as being "heartily in accord" with the suggestions. Mr. Shorey characterizes the remarks as "very constructive and valuable to us. They will be placed in the hands of about ninety executives responsible for the character of our pictures," declares Mr. Shorey.

The official message of Mayor Church of Toronto, Ontario, on Armistice Day, November 11, took the form of a protest to the Ontario Provincial Government against the continuance of the so-called war tax on amusements. Mayor Church intimated that, with hostilities concluded two years before, it was time that the Ontario authorities abolish the amusement tax.

In a letter to Hon. Peter Smith, Provincial Treasurer, the Toronto Mayor suggested that some move be taken to abolish the tax on theatre tickets which, he asserted, had been unpopular and had always reacted on those least able to pay. The Mayor also made the significant statement that the abolishment of the tax would be timely of the tendency to reduce admission prices by theatre exhibitors.

During 1919 no less than $600,000 was collected by the Ontario Government in the tax on theatre admission tickets, according to official announcement. A great proportion of this sum had been paid in small sums by children and poor people who patronized the moving picture theatres. It is the feeling that the amusement tax has outlived its real purpose and that it is now merely a relic of the war.

Moving picture projection machines will help to relieve the shortage of qualified school teachers in Ontario public schools, according to official opinions expressed at the recent Teachers' convention at Stratford, Ontario, which was attended by Hon. R. H. Grant, Ontario Minister of Education, and Hon. Peter Smith, Provincial Treasurer. A feature of the convention was a demonstration with a Pathescope machine.

SEATTLE

Sale of the building housing the Rex theatre, on Second avenue, between Seneca and University streets, was announced. The property was bought by the Progressive Enterprise Company, one of the Jensen & Von Herberg theatre concerns, from the Sanderson-Redfield Investment Company. The consideration was $140,000.

The Jensen & Von Herberg interests have been operating the theatre for some time. They now plan to remodel it and make it one of the finest of the smaller houses in the city. An elaborate front will be put in; the interior will be remodelled and redecorated, and new furnishings will be installed throughout.

The building has a thirty-foot frontage on Second avenue by 100 foot depth.

November 20th to 27th

The Biggest Week—Except one—in the History of Paramount Pictures

WITH the week ending, Saturday, November 27th, 1920—last week—the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation did the biggest week's business in its history, with the single exception of Paramount Week, 1920.

Here's why—

Today the big pictures are the ones—the only ones—that make money.

Crowded houses, under present conditions, come only with out-of-the-ordinary pictures.

Paramount has more of this class of pictures than ever in its history, and more than all the other distributors combined.

Paramount has the organization to deliver, week after week, a steady supply of the big pictures the public is looking for.

Paramount will continue to deliver in quality and quantity.

In line with its policy of striving to build greater box-office receipts for every Paramount exhibitor, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in 1921 will greatly increase its appropriation for National Advertising.

Contracts to show Paramount Pictures are written guarantees for a prosperous New Year.

"ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN"

how ASCHER BROTHERS

Owners of Sixteen Leading Houses in Chicago

put this picture over

IMMEDIATELY ON BOOKING THIS PICTURE, Ascher Brothers, owners of sixteen leading houses in Chicago, followed our suggestion and secured for each house the services of a singer to render vocal accompaniment during the showing of "Once to Every Woman"—with such remarkable success as to make their presentation more than worthy of an advertisement, so that others may follow.

This Is How They Do It

Ascher Brothers' singer appears first in Reel Three where the title reads: "My daughter is making her debut tonight—may God be kind to her," and sings the aria from "Faust," with spotlight.

Her second singing is in Reel Six, where Dorothy Phillips leaves New York and appears at the gate of her old home—and the song is "Home, Sweet Home," sung behind the curtain.

THE THIRD AND MOST APPEALING singing is where Dorothy Phillips, near the end, kneels at her mother's bedside and comforts her with that beautiful and famous song, "BEN BOLT." This, also, is sung behind the curtain.

THE RESULT IS NOTHING SHORT OF MIRACULOUS. THERE IS HARDLY A DRY EYE IN THE HOUSE. EVERYONE LEAVES THE THEATRE TALKING ABOUT THE WONDERFUL PICTURE AND ITS BEAUTIFUL PRESENTATION.

TAKE A TIP FROM ONE OF THE MOST SUCCESSFUL EXHIBITING FIRMS IN THE WHOLE COUNTRY AND UTILIZE NOT ONLY THIS INEXPENSIVE AND RESULTFUL PRESENTATION, BUT ALSO THE BEN BOLT HERALD TIE-UP DESCRIBED IMMEDIATELY BELOW. IT IS SURE-FIRE ADVANCE ADVERTISING AT WONDERFULLY LOW COST.

PEOPLE have said that all an exhibitor cares to know about a picture is whether or not it will make money for him. But Universal believes that even your record-breaking receipts on "The Devil's Passkey" will not blind you to the reason for its sensational success in small houses no less than big ones. That reason is its tremendous intensity and suspense—all given you in settings that could not be more faithful or artistic had they really been made in Paris.

But that is exactly and precisely why International is in greater favor with your audience than any other News Service. My dear Mr. Abrams:

No doubt you will be glad to know that "Doug's" picture, "The Mark of Zorro", turned a new house record for the Capitol Theatre and I believe a record for any theatre in existence, playing to 19,547 people on the opening day, which is, I think, the largest attendance ever obtained in the history of entertainment.

The picture went over with a bang and as I told you before, registered with the audience as perhaps the best thing that Fairbanks has ever done. It surely is corking entertainment.

Louise Glaum, under the able supervision of J. Parker Read, Jr., has exceeded her previous best in "Love," her newest production. Because it treats vividly of a subject that touches every human heart it is a picture of universal appeal. Because it contains a score of scenes of bewildering beauty and magnitude it is a picture that gratifies the eye.

"Just finished three days of Louise Glaum in 'Love'," telegraphs G. H. Meyers from the Park Theatre, Champaign, Ill., "A wonderful picture. The best she's done. Let's have more like it."

Echo everywhere answers: "A wonderful picture! The best she's done!"

And so it is!

"It cannot be disputed that 'The Last of the Mohicans' is Mr. Tourneur's greatest achievement —a masterpiece of its kind. It's the greatest Indian picture ever shown. He has kept faith with Cooper's memory."—Laurence Reid, Motion Picture News.

"The public owes Maurice Tourneur a vote of thanks for putting 'The Last of the Mohicans' on the screen. It will restore the popularity of the story. The production is worthy of the subject and a sterling addition to A. P.'s output."—Edward Weitzel, Moving Picture World.

"Tourneur sets his associates a mighty pace. 'The Last of the Mohicans' is a truly great work—a master work—in picture making. It has thrills aplenty and is a box office attraction of the richest sort."—Charles Hastings, Exhibitors Trade Review.

"Tourneur has done it again. 'The Last of the Mohicans' has resulted in thrills galore. There are so many of them that it is going to be difficult to make your crowd believe that all of them appear in one production. Play this up."—Wid's Daily.

"The Fort William Henry massacre will stand comparison with anything ever accomplished for the screen. For a parallel to this scene one must turn to the battle on the walls of Babylon in Mr. Griffith's masterpiece, 'Intolerance.'"—S. M. Weller, New York Review.

"In such a remarkable manner has Mr. Tourneur conjoined history and art that the result is one of the most valuable features ever brought to the screen. The wise exhibitor will make his exploitation of this feature elaborate."—Irma Frances Dupre, Exhibitors Herald.

The motion picture rights to the twenty-six volumes of world-famous detective stories, by Pierre Souvestre and Marcel Allain, narrating the exploits of the master criminal

Fantomas

① are exclusively owned by the Fox Film Corporation

② A twenty episode up-to-the-second, American-made serial, based on these stories, is now nearing completion at the Fox Studios, New York City.

In addition to protecting his own interests William Fox feels it is his duty to warn exhibitors that they in turn may protect their patrons — against this palpable attempt to foist upon the public an antiquated production long withdrawn from the market.

DON'T BE DECEIVED

Comparisons may be odious but they are often necessary.

The William Fox 1921 Fantomas in 20 episodes is the last word in serial making, with such characterization and direction as is contained in "Bride 13", pronounced by all the greatest serial ever made. (4)

The serial advertised by competitors was made nearly seven years ago with the typical French direction and characterization in vogue at that time. It was originally released in episodes of 4 to 5 reels each and is now being offered in about eight episodes of 2 reels each. We are sure the fair-minded exhibitor, with the interests of his theatre and audience at heart, will not allow himself to be deceived nor mistake one production for the other. (5)

EDUCATIONALS ARE ALL GOOD"

IN its few months in this field Educational has come to be known as having established a new standard in comedies.

Note that this exhibitor, in praising one picture says that "it is no exception to other Educationals."

He expects every Educational comedy to be a GOOD picture—and he is not disappointed.

HERE all four of the two reel comedy brands are mentioned in a single line—"Seven Bald Pates," a Christie; "Four Times Foiled," a Chester; "Dynamite," a Mermaid, and "Torchy," first of the Torchys.

"If they keep up this pace they should corner the market"—And the pace has been made the faster.

IT doesn't matter the section—look at the divisions of the country represented in these four notices—the opinion is the same. You've never heard before of people wanting to see a two reel comedy the second time.

We've selected "Kiss Me Caroline" as the subject of these reports from exhibitors to show you they all agree.

THIS town of 3,000 demands the best in comedies, too. The Princess theatre knows the best ones and its manager tells the rest of the exhibitors—"Don't be afraid of Educationals."

They are not, and that is the reason why the bookings of these pictures have set a mark that has astounded the whole of the motion picture world.

Every Educational Comedy is a box office winner. These reports from the Exhibitors Herald prove that.

If you don't know the Christies, the Chesters, the Mermaids and the Torchys you are not doing yourself justice.

Short Subjects

Kiss Me Caroline (Educational), with a special cast.—Educational has the only consistently good comedies on the market, excepting Lloyd, who stands in a class by himself. Kiss Me Caroline is no exception to other Educationals, which are all good.—Fred S. Meyer, Palace theatre, Hamilton, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

Seven Bald Pates, Four Times Foiled, Dynamite and Torchy (Educational), with special casts.—Four of the best comedies ever played. If Educational keeps up this pace they should corner the market. Buy 'em; they'll please.—H. A. McClure, Strand theatre, Emporia, Kan.—Neighborhood patronage.

Short Subjects

Kiss Me, Caroline (Educational), with a special cast.—If you want one of the cleverest mirth-producers made, book this one. Most of my patrons want me to re-book it. They stayed for the next show to see it again.—H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—General patronage.

Kiss Me Caroline (Educational), with a special cast.—The best comedy I've had in a long time. In fact I think it is the best comedy I ever had except Lloyd and Fatty. Don't be afraid of Educationals.—J. G. Varnell, Princess theatre, Piedmont, Ala.—Small town patronage.

NEW CHRISTIES HAVE NEW "PEP"

UNDER Educational release two reel Christie Comedies are better than ever. They have established new booking records. They have been given exploitation that a year ago would have seemed impossible in the short subject field. They have established box office records that have amazed exhibitors themselves.

Eighty per cent of the possibilities of the country have been booked. Possibly you cannot get the Christies for your territory. But if there is a chance you had better try before your competitor does so.

They're filled with "pep" and pretty girls, with the cleverest of comedians, the best of stories, and a new mark set in production.

Drop into your nearest exchange now and see the newest one, "Back From the Front."

Every Christie released by Educational has been a HIT; each one means stimulus for your box office. Better ask for every one of them: "Kiss Me Caroline," "A Seaside Siren," "Out for the Night," "Seven Bald Pates," "Don't Blame the Stork," "Striking Models," "A Homespun Hero," "Shuffle the Queens," "Going Through the Rye," "Mr. Fatima" and "Wedding Blues."

Bobby Vernon in
SEVEN BALD PATES
Two-Part Comedy; Christie-Educational
Published in October

OPINION Here is a comedy idea evolved with such brisk cleverness and action that it will take an unresponsive patron indeed to resist its inspiration to a succession of hearty laughs.

Bobby Vernon appears herewith as a bridegroom who is being pursued by a bald headed man with a summons. His endeavors to evade that gentleman until, at least, after the knot is tied afford some of the most amusing situations imaginable. For one thing, he loses the license, and the pace that he leads the bald headed finder of it, believing it to be a summons, is a strenuous one. He enlists the aid of two home-town friends, instructing them to dispose in some way of any bald headed man who should attempt to interrupt the wedding. In consequence, believing it better to have too many suspects than too few, the three make a collection of gagged and bound bald headed men that includes the bride's father and the minister. The wedding over and the lovers about to depart on their trip, the real process server arrives upon the [illegible] summons is [illegible]

OPINION The stage, before, after and during the performance of a comedy and melodrama, affords a play place for the romping of the Christie players, Bobby Vernon leading them, through this bit of screen fun.

Bobby takes the part of a young man of means, who, to live up to the role in which his cousin's imagination has placed him, that of a "rube," assumes the earmarks of a rural swain and comes a-courting with a pet gander and a bag of apples. The duck's response to the bare knees of the chorus ladies is a rich and inoffensive bit of fun. In pursuit of the young man are a detective and two of the erstwhile wives of the bigamist for whom the officer mistakes Bobby. There are a series of fun sallies on the stage and in the wings, a romance, [illegible] Bobby and one of the young [illegible] company, and the final [illegible] the bringing

(Christie Comedy—Educational—Two Reels)

ONE may classify this newest comedy from the Christie lots as a breezy, entertaining contribution to the screen. At the Rivoli, New York, the comedy put the audience into high jinks of laughter. It carries a snap, a zest, which enhances its value not a little.—Laurence Reid

"Don't Blame the Stork"
(Christie Comedy—Educational—Two Reels)

If an exhibitor wants to book a comedy which is founded upon a logical idea, which carries a perfect continuity, which is well fortified with amusing incidents, which is zippy and to the point in its flashes and which is well acted by a competent comedian and fellow players, let him look no further than the latest Christie, "Don't Blame the Stork." The wedding ceremony utilized again but with delightfully new trimmings. So simple is its development that it puzzles one why it has not been thought of before. The title is a knock-out when you learn the meaning of it.—Laurence Reid

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Eddie Barry in
OUT FOR THE NIGHT
Two-part comedy; Christie-Educational
Published in September.

OPINION: The troubles of a college professor straying from the domestic and academic fold to yield to the lure of a prize fight form the basis of activities in this lively fun picture.

A baseball game staged by a group of college girls introduces the fun. A feigned illness and his substitution of a colored servant closely resembling him give the professor the chance to slip away to the fight. The finding of the servant convinces the wife that mortification has set in upon her husband, and the escape of the colored substitute is the signal for a chase through the streets that threatens to be the undoing of the professor. The cleverness of a youth who looks with favor upon the prospect of being the professor's son-in-law, but whose suit is frowned upon by the jam-dy, extricates the father from the difficulties and wins the girl for himself.

Charlotte Merriam is a pretty "Mary," and the part of the professor's wife is played by Margaret Cullington.

(Christie Comedy—2 Reels)

MR. CHRISTIE has fashioned a comedy that lives up to his reputation in the field of comedy makers. With an excellent production standing back of the picture and clever situations given the principals, headed by Eddie Barry whose facial expressions and appreciation for comedy always get a laugh, "Out for the Night" is well worthy a place on any program. It held the comedy position at New York's Rivoli and despite the fact that the hot weather had driven most of New York to the beaches, those who remained and attended the Rivoli were obliged to forget the heat and laugh during the run of this subject. Nicely photographed, well directed, acted and produced, "Out for the Night" is a good bet for any house.—Joseph L. Kelley.

KISS ME CAROLINE—
Christie

THE real bedroom farce of the screen. Al Christie has, with this rapid comedy, achieved painlessly what other producers have attempted in vain with their lavish picturizations of expensive and risque Broadway hits. They are all the usual complications, which ensue when Bobby Vernon impersonates his pal's wife to please his pal's father, and pal's sister and her chum come to visit them. Bobby is a continual scream; while Charlotte Merriam, a pretty blonde, and Vera Steadman, who formerly performed in tanks, provide the embellishments. We should call this the best short comedy of the month.

MARSHALL NEILAN'S

Story is one picture in thousands that has stirred the unbounded enthusiasm of every critic — as well as the great throngs that crowded the Big Broadway Strand to see this most unusual picture.

A ZIPPY PLAY

"The Strand theatre has another of the zippy Marshall Neilan production, this one entitled 'Dinty,' featuring freckled-faced Wesley Barry.

"The story is laid in San Francisco, where 'Dinty' O'Sullivan, a newsboy, comes into prosperity, and adventure, through returning to Judge Whitely, its owner, a wallet the lad had picked up. Again Dinty does a great service for the Judge, and receives reward in the shape of promised adoption of himself and his two pals. Young Mr. Barry displays such deep woe over the screen death of his cinema mother as to make those who see it ardently hope he may never experience such an affliction.

"In the cast are quantities of just 'kids,' and there is about five thousand feet of remarkable photography also present."—New York American.

EXCEPTION MERIT

"In the human story of 'Dinty,' Marshall Neilan's latest work, at the Strand, in which Wesley Barry, the freckle-faced boy actor, appears, there is exceptional merit both in the acting and direction, the latter of which was in personal charge of Mr. Neilan. It pleased large audiences."—New York World.

A REGULAR FELLER

"Wesley Barry is by far the best all-round boy on the screen. He's the kind of boy a teacher would take one look at and count on him to be the center of deviltry throughout the term.

"He has the freckles, and the perpetual motion, and the tousled head, and the facial expression that goes so quickly from mischief to nonchalant innocence—everything that goes to make a regular feller.

"In 'Dinty' he has a role which gives him every chance. As a ragged newsboy he makes pals of Watermillion and Chinkie, whose names indicate the diversity of their races. These three fight with the ward rowdies who are trying to keep a corner on the newspaper sales.

"Dinty is taught by his dying mother to turn the other cheek and to love his enemies, but he finds it works better in the Holy Land than it does in San Francisco, especially when the enemy is Muggsy.

"He's apparently a mechanical genius, if one may judge by the machine he invents to lift the covers off him when the alarm clock rings five-thirty; also the fan for his sick mother, which is operated by water power (the kitchen faucet), and the pulleys over the sick-bed from which hang suspended everything mother may need while son is out hustling for their living!

"There's an elaborate story of Chinese underground life in the Golden Gate city which is commonplace compared to the characterization of Dinty. However, it serves to give the young hero his big chance—to rescue the daughter of a judge from an underworld den and, of course, to be adopted by the judge. The story is too long, and in the cutting it suffered somewhat. One is speeded from one scene to another so rapidly that the tale loses strength.

"Colleen Moore is very charming, particularly as the young Irish immigrant. The lighting and sets show the care for detail which marks most Marshall Neilan pictures. Altogether I like 'Dinty' very much. First for Wesley Barry, and second for his funny boy pals—and enemies.—New York News.

"The Strand theatre should announce this as children's week and make a bid for the youngsters to see 'Dinty,' starring the fourteen-year-old boy, bespeckled Wesley Barry. Marshall Neilan's picture and scenario can only be pleasant to grown-ups but the kids ought to go away raving.

"Dinty is a San Francisco street gamin. He sells papers for a living, but a big bully runs him and all the rest of the little fellows off the street corner. Dinty gets up a gang all of his own and the retribution that follows will please any boy's sense of justice.

"The picture bears that unique stamp of Neilan which makes it a concoction of a scientific melodrama and a heart-breaking yarn. Something akin to the Neilan picture would occur if the author of the Craig Kennedy stories would try to write "Home, Sweet Home." In 'Dinty' there is the simple pathos of a small boy caring for a bereaved and tubercular mother, all of which is combined with tong wars, telautographs, and ingenious opium dives. The trouble is that oil and water do not mix and the blood and thunder of the story skims the watery plot.

"Those that go to see young Barry perform will be instantly diverted to Colleen Moore's playing the part of the mother. She is a pretty little trick, best known for playing opposite some slap-stick comedian. Here she is given a golden opportunity and makes enough out of it to elevate her Gaelic patronymic to the incandescants. The picture opens with her as a sprightly maid of Erin. She marries her Dennis and follows him to America and he is soon put away by an automobile accident. She is forced to support her child, Dinty, by scrubbing floors. She registers these vicissitudes with rare effectiveness.

"Young Barry plays the same sort of role that has made him a screen favorite, only this time the audience has more of him. He foils the crooks as he has done in previous pictures. He hardly deserves the distinction of a star because he is an ingratiating kid, but not a telling actor."—New York Mail.

CAUSE FOR JOY

"We confess to an instinctive shrinking from that form of the drama known as 'kiddie plays.' To our mind, a 'kiddie' suggests an obnoxious little creature, hardly human, certainly not child-like. On the stage or screen they show a shocking lack of reticence by always saying their prayers in public. Or else they are eternally bringing together a mamma and papa who, judging from all that has gone before in the plot, should remain separated for the public good. They make a profession of being little darlings, and the first part of our dramatic litany is that from these and kindred pests may our good editor deliver us.

"To our joy, however, we discovered at the Strand Sunday that Wesley Barry is not of this tribe. He may be saved by a freckle or by a toothless grin or by something inherent in him that makes him a regular guy. It is true that 'Dinty' has given him a sick mother to support and a little Negro friend to protect, both excellent opportunities for the 'kiddie' motif in huge and sickening doses. But there is nothing of the little darling about young Wes who fights or grins when a kiddie would be praying. The more sentimental interludes are taken care of by Marjorie Daw, leaving Wesley to work out his rough-and-tumble destiny.

"A delightful little piccaninny and an equally charming though more solemn Chinese baby are foils for 'Dinty' deeds of valor. It is a Marshall Neilan picture with the usual mixture of slapstick and melodrama."—New York Globe.

IT'S VERY HUMAN

"Screen and stage children are nice if you don't have too much of them, but when we see that one is starred we go to the theatre firm in the conviction that we are going to be bored and perhaps made downright mad. There is something about a star, anyway, that is apt to be annoying. Everything always turns out all right for him, and the star can do no wrong. The trouble with children is that they are old enough to realize this, but not old enough to conceal the fact, and a little of them goes a long way.

"We loathe consciously cute tots or kiddies, therefore we were delightfully surprised when we sat through 'Dinty,' the feature picture at the Strand this week. Of course, Marshall Neilan can usually be counted on to bring out the best there is in a story, but he did disappoint us once—perhaps the odds were too heavy for him. At any rate, his fine imagination is apparent everywhere in this First National picture, which stars the youthful actor, Wesley Barry.

"An interesting story runs parallel with the one woven around an Irish newsboy, Dinty, and one is glad to be taken away from the ingenuousness of the black and tan juveniles once in a while, even if the detour does take one into the underground passages and the torture chambers of San Francisco's Chinatown. This part is straight melodrama, and Noah Beery is seen as Wong Tai, a half-breed, who is at the head of all Chinatown's wickedness.

"Wesley Barry is especially delightful because he is so ugly. No amount of grease paint or persuasion could ever make an angel child of him. He is seen as a little newsboy who supports his mother in a basement room. The atmosphere is excellent and it almost made us cough just to look at the cobwebs over the windows and the dirt floor. No wonder she died of tuberculosis! The picture is filled with whimsical touches which make it very human. One which we liked was the tough recruit who shouted "Lovers die in death pact" to prove his ability to sell papers. Another was the gift of cigars to the policemen by Dinty.

"Go and see 'Dinty.' You won't mind it even if the heroine, Marjorie Daw, is fastened in the torture chamber. It all becomes farce when Dinty opens the door of the chamber by hooking an iron chain on it and fastening the other end to the trolley car.

"The picture has as many moods as an April day, but it is entertaining stuff and some of the acting is excellent. Besides the young star, who plays some splendid scenes at the deathbed of his mother, good work is done by Colleen Moore as the mother, Noah Beery as the half-breed, and the black and tan juveniles whose names do not appear on the program."—New York Tribune.

REGULAR HEART STUFF

"Cinema thrills with plenty of laughter and a little sadness feature 'Dinty' at the Strand theatre this week. Marshall Neilan has outdistanced his previous picture productions and Miss Marion Fairfax has released her best sob stuff for the poor newsboy who is striving to keep the wolf from scratching the paint off his widowed mother's poverty stricken hut. A small lad, Wesley Barry—he of the freckles with Mary Pickford in 'Polyanna'—is the featured player who carries 'Dinty' through five reels of regular heart stuff. Barry has a lot of stuff and his ability as an acrobat vies with his emotional qualities when his mother is torn from him.

"'Dinty' gets plenty of opportunity to handle regular action stuff and foils Chinese opium workers and solves the problem of storing away ice cream to such an extent that the laws of space and proportion are given an awful jolt."—New York Evening World.

A SNAPPY STORY

"The Strand has Marshall Neilan's newest production, 'Dinty,' as its feature. Wesley Barry and his freckles are featured in what proves a snappy story with decided heart-pull to it and plenty of humor. There is a smashing climax, too. The picture is decidedly worth seeing, and has been made with photography of the sort to delight the eye."—New York Journal.

A FIRST NATIONAL ATTRACTION

AS GOOD AS CHAPLIN

"'Dinty' is at the Strand theatre this week. It is Marshall Neilan's latest production to reach New York from the Coast. First National is releasing it and little Wesley Barry, he of the freckled tace, is the principal character. To carry the honors of a five-reel production is no slight task for a small boy, but young Wesley proves that he has the right to have his name in electric lights with Mary Pickford and Charles Chaplin and the rest of them.

"Barry has a smattering of all the talents which are necessary for a histrionic career. He is delightfully comic, and is shown in the scenes in which, as a little Irish boy selling papers in San Francisco, he has to flout the machination of the city bully who wants to own all the corners in the neighborhood. He has the power of emotional expression and in the scenes in which the lad was deprived of his one tie on earth—his mother, whom he has striven to support and amuse—his sorrow is genuine. Besides, he has a flair for acrobatics, and has a fast pair of legs. His unique personality has a distinct appeal. A woman in the audience remarked yesterday: 'Lord, he's homely, but I certainly am crazy about him.'

"Besides the appealing character of the boy Marshall Neilan has woven a strong strain of melodrama into the picture.

"There are Chinese opium smugglers who are foiled by the Government by Dinty's efforts but the most appealing part of the picture is devoted to Dinty's struggles for his ailing mother, and the many devices he has evolved to wake himself in the morning to make his mother's life easier. Though we get a real thrill when Dinty and his two friends, the Chink and the pickaninny, succeed in cramming all the ice cream in the world into what they term their 'stummicks.'

"Then another delightful touch is provided by young Newton Hall, whose claim to distinction comes through the possession of a powerful set of lungs.

"Mr. Neilan and his associate director, John MacDermott, have not neglected the older generation in the care they have devoted in the selection of the younger. Colleen Moore gives a sympathetic portrayal of the young mother, and J. Barney Sherry, Marjorie Daw and Noah Beery are excellent in other leading parts. 'Dinty', is a thoroughly delightful picture, splendidly produced."—New York Morning Telegraph.

DELIGHTFUL ENTERTAINMENT

"Something delightful in screen entertainment is offered this week at the Strand in 'Dinty,' for Marshall Neilan has obviously decided to dispense with the usual cut and dried romance suitable for five reels and star a boy, this being the era of child prodigies. Wesley Barry may not have enough book lore to enter Columbia at the age of 12 or enough chess strategy to outgeneral would-be generals at West Point, but he is perfectly fitted to enter San Francisco's domain of the newsboys and organize them into a trust, and then outgeneral desperadoes who spirit away the District Attorney's sweetheart with anything but the finesse of chess. This photoplay has much of the humor of a Booth Tarkington production, with more action, and unless Barry suffers from elephantiasis of the cranium he will do much in the future to divert film fans with his aspect of a shrewd yet slightly bewildered puppy."—New York Sun.

HAS QUAINT APPEAL

"Again the freckled-faced Wesley Barry adds his quaint appeal to a Marshall Neilan film, but that is not the only appeal that Mr. Neilan has brought over from his 'Go and Get It.' Again this youngster of inventive disposition (with pals and boyhood enemies added) is hitched to a plot of intrigue and the detection of crime. So, as before, Mr. Neilan goes gunning, so to speak, for every one in the audience. Those who have tired of smugglers, the labyrinths of Chinatown, and the Pauline perils sort of melodrama will surely be caught by the mother-and-son theme. And those whom sentiment only antagonizes because it would force unwilling tears will find refuge in the street urchin humor (as forced as the tears), in hydroplane chases, or in the troubles of the heroine. Or they may find amusement in the uncongruity of certain sets. This, to be sure, has been contributed unconsciously by the director. Certainly, had he been awake to his own doings, he would not have given the judge no less than a mansion outside and a room inside fitted up to resemble a cheap West Side apartment.

"The story starts in Ireland—the cradle of a good American citizen, one is reminded—that the chord of pathos is struck early in the game when the little wife, coming from Ireland to join her husband finds he has been killed the very day of her arrival. She must take care of her babe-in-arms alone, and by the time he is twelve and able to make a small living by selling newspapers she lies helplessly abed with consumption. At this point the thriller story is hauled in, a story of the Chinese underworld, of Judge Whitley's fight against criminality there, of the abduction of his daughter as a reprisal, and Dinty's share in her rescue. His inventive genius finds an outlet when it comes to tearing down secret doors. Running parallel with his story are the scenes of his life among the newsboys, which serves, if nothing else, to introduce a little darky and a Chinese lad who are quite diverting in themselves."—New York Post.

ACTION IS RAPID

"'Dinty,' at the Strand theatre this week, is that sort of feature photoplay that makes an audience laugh, cry and be thrilled. Action is rapid, the best part of the scenario by Miss Marion Fairfax being about a newsboy, who struggles to keep his ill mother alive, fights freely with the rival gang, and leads his own crowd into many a thrilling scrape. The accompanying plot involves about everything else conceivable in pictures, including Chinatown villains, an honest judge, his lovely daughter, a horrific den, subterranean passages, submarines and seaplanes, wireless telautograph, opium smuggling, abduction, murder and torture.

"Wesley Barry is a real rough-and-tumble boy. He scores with Mary Pickford in 'Daddy Long Legs.' In 'Dinty,' where he is elevated to stardom, he shows considerable ability at bringing smiles. Beside the young star, good work is done by Colleen Moore, as the mother, Noah Beery as the half-breed and the black and tan juveniles whose names do not appear on the program. J. Barney Sherry and Marjorie Daw also take their parts splendidly."—New York Telegram.

IRRESISTIBLE FUN

"There is irresistible fun in Marshall Neilan's 'Dinty' at the Strand this week. How much of it there is for any spectator depends somewhat upon his power of resistance, for the comedy itself is not funny, and yet makes such heavy efforts to be funny, sad, sentimental and melodramatic that it simply invites resistance to any and all of its efforts. If a man stands up and announces with assurance, 'I'm going to make you laugh,' or 'I'm going to make you cry,' or 'I'm going to give you a thrill,' any more or less human being just naturally feels, 'I'll be durned if you will,' and does his best not to laugh or cry or be thrilled. And he's likely to win more rounds than his opponent, because the latter not only places obstacles in his own way, but weakens his effort by revealing the coldness of his calculation and its utter lack of spontaneity.

"And so it is with 'Dinty.' It is one of those deliberately funny, sad and thrilling motion pictures that does not conceal its deliberateness. So it often fails to achieve the effect sought after. And most noticeably it does this when it tries to be sad and thrilling. Genuineness is then almost entirely lacking, and there's nothing to take its place. It does score, however, in quite a number of its efforts to be funny, for it so happens that Marshall Neilan has a knack of putting broad humor into motion pictures, especially when dealing with boys, and some of the youngsters in the cast are naturally amusing. First of all, there's little Wesley Barry, who, when his manner is not too sophisticated and cock-sure, is a real rough-and-tumble boy, and in his present picture he is companioned by that constitutionally comic little Ethiop, who, for some time, has been an anonymous source of merriment in Harold Lloyd farces, and is now programed as Aaron Mitchell, which, assuredly, is only a modest part of his full name. And there are other boys in the cast, dozens of them, who have been well selected and, living, give life to the scenes they are in. There is in particular one Chinese child, whose name is either absent from the program, or not identifiable among others there, but who deserves a place with any of them.

"The best part of the story of 'Dinty' is about a newsboy who struggles to keep his sick mother alive, fights freely with his street friends, gangs it with his own crowd and is always up to something. There is also an accompanying plot that brings Chinatown villains, an honest Judge, his lovely daughter, a horrific den, subterranean passages, seaplanes, submarines, wireless telautography, opium smuggling, abduction, murder, torture and about everything else conceivable into the picture. There are also numerous subtitles which do a wholesale business in heroics, and there is one which quotes an American naval officer as calling a submarine of his own fleet, 'U-Boat Number Seven.'

"Those who attempt to carry the scenes placarded 'sad' and 'thrilling' include Colleen Moore, J. Barry Sherry, Marjorie Daw and Noah Beery, who do the best they can."—New York Times.

THRILLS AND COMEDY

"Another trust is shown at the Strand in 'Dinty,' though this time the hero is hand in glove with it, buying police protection with cigars. He is Wesley Barry, the youngster who scored with Mary Pickford in 'Daddy Long Legs,' and who is now elevated to stardom by Marshall Neilan and set on the way to acquiring a temperament. As a San Francisco newsboy who organizes an amusing newsboys' trust Barry proves that while this corporation may not have any soul, it has plenty of freckles.

"The scenario, written by Miss Marion Fairfax for this First National picture relates Dinty's fight against his rivals and the manner in which he defeats a band of Chinese highbinders who steal the assistant district attorney's sweetheart. With secret passageways in Chinatown, a swinging knife that drops ever closer to the body of pretty Marjorie Daw as the heroine, and with darting seaplanes, thrills and juvenile comedy are well blended here, though there are some improbabilities, while too many stories are kept going synchronously and the pathos stop is pulled out till it squeaks. Barry, however, weeps as earnestly as he plays everything else."—New York Herald.

Something the Exhibitor Should Know

IT is the producer who predetermines, and has made, the poster for which the exhibitor pays good money. Is he always a sincere and trustworthy agent to do this without question? Many of them are honestly ignorant of the difference between a great poster and a worthless one, and, under those circumstances, they naturally take the cheapest and not only the cheapest but some producers never pay one cent for their posters. They get any lithographer who is willing to do those posters for nothing in return for the privilege of selling them direct to the exhibitor through their exchanges and the producer even gets a rebate on each sheet so sold. Naturally such posters are entirely worthless. Such lithographers could not produce a good poster if they tried, and they don't even try. Their only incentive is to make it as cheap as possible, which is but natural, under the circumstances. The producers that buy RITCHEY posters are the ones who know the difference and they know it so well that they pay real money for them. For some of our large producers, it amounts to hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, and still they pay it because that's the only way RITCHEY posters can be had.

The funny part of this whole affair is this: that the exhibitor is made to pay for the worthless posters just as much, and in most cases, more, than for RITCHEY posters. The one real protection that the exhibitor has against this exploitation is the RITCHEY trade mark.

Of course, the producer will always attend to the making of the posters, but it is up to the exhibitor before booking a picture to see that it is accompanied by posters of value. Otherwise select one that is so accompanied!

Motion Picture News

VOL. XXII DECEMBER 11, 1920 No. XXV

This Is Not War with Ghosts

IT would be decidedly well if we stopped talking about business uncertainty and devoted ourselves to the one certainty that is facing the motion picture with a certainty of wrecking it—unless we act quickly and effectively.

That certainty is the Blue Law Sunday.

Our business, in this present period of readjustment, will only be uncertain as we ourselves make it so. All that is needed is less waste and more work; less ego and more cooperation, less guesswork and more fact figures. We have a buying public and no necessity for falling prices. What more could be asked?

But the other menace, the real menace, just as bad, just as unfair and, in a way, far worse than censorship, namely the national closing of Picture Theatres on Sunday will be a certainty if the powerful and well-financed organization back of it has its own determined way.

If ever the industry needed a clarion call for self-defense that time is here.

A juncture against censorship has already been effected by the Exhibitors League and National Association.

Their united strength and their most intelligent efforts are immediately needed—action cannot come too quickly—to counter-check this new and unexpected development.

We know the people back of the Blue Law Sunday. We have met their legislative lobbies, their salaried agents.

We know their tactics, their state of mind, and we are aroused to bitterest resentment, not merely because we have commercially to do with the motion picture but because as American citizens, we resent the oppression of a minority and because as intelligent human beings, we oppose fanaticism, and the so-called religion that utterly lacks charity.

But we will accomplish nothing by declaring war, nor by using war measures.

We will need cool judgment, tact and patience.

We know that the great majority of the people of the country want a liberal Sunday. We know that they want motion pictures. We know that the women's organizations a very large number of churches and clergymen and most city administrations and civic societies realize fully and clearly that the motion picture must be worked with and not against, must be viewed with intelligence and not with unreasoning hatred.

In many a city and town today intelligent exhibitor leadership has brought about understanding, sympathy and successful cooperation between the churches and the motion picture.

We need an extension—a wide extension—of this same calm, intelligent, local action. The women's organizations may be relied upon as a liberal and powerful force. If the National Association and the Exhibitors League will encourage and direct this local activity everywhere, we believe that the efforts of the reform minority will be dissipated at their source. The screen itself can everywhere be made the agent of this work.

In a nut shell, this contemplated reform is like any other of a radical nature. It is the attempted control of the majority by a minority. The logical move then, the most important too, whatever else may and must be done, is the full awakening of the majority to what is being foisted upon them.

That is our move; and it's our move—NOW!

One Way to Do It

AS a striking instance of what can be done by community cooperation, we submit the work of the Women's Co-operative Alliance of Minneapolis.

First a survey was made of the local motion picture situation, the pictures, picture theatres, curfew enforcement, etc.

This information was presented at a large meeting to which the local theatre managers were invited. The following spoke from their respective viewpoints: a clergyman, a school teacher, a mother, a club woman.

The slogan adopted for the meeting was "Selection not Censorship." All instructive agencies such as churches, mother's clubs, Parents and Teachers Associations, improvement, community and commercial clubs, Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. branches and principals of schools near theatres were united to select members for a joint committee to work with the theatre managers.

The Women's Alliance, to quote the words of its Assistant Secretary, "has always kept in mind that the motion picture is here to stay; that the manager is not in the business for philanthropic purposes; that the function of the motion picture theatre is primarily a form of relaxation and amusement; that these are the things to keep uppermost in mind. . . ."

And, above all, this; "WE ALSO FIRMLY BELIEVE THAT THE PUBLIC OPINION ALONE CAN SHAPE THE DESTINY OF A COMMUNITY."

If every community had this kind of cooperative effort if public opinion everywhere was thus sounded and met, there would be no censorship of the motion picture, there would be no Blue Sunday, and Dr. Wilbur F. Krafts and the rest of the salaried agitators would be out of their jobs.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Personalities

Off-Hand Introductions by Robert E. Welsh

AS far as this week's page is concerned, Happy Golucky, the perspiring press agent who has been contributing more or less successfully, was fired several days ago.

Happy is too lighthearted a person for these parlous times. We have never taken the trouble to look "parlous" up in the dictionary, but if it means anything at all—these are the times.

You've got to be serious and long-faced to be in tune with the moment. If it isn't the man who sonorously discusses "general business conditions," it's one of the ninety-nine who can tell you about a new legislative problem that is facing the well-known and well-faced industry.

You haven't a chance to dodge trouble anyway you turn. Unless you happen to stroll up Broadway some afternoon about two and see the lines struggling to pay fifty cents and a dollar top. Witness what Doug Fairbanks did at the Capitol Sunday; or listen to Joe Plunkett tell of Constance Talmadge's pull at the Strand the same day.

LEGISLATIVE problems and "crises" are here aplenty. A week ago Charles Pettijohn, Paul Gulick, Frederick Elliott and Jack Connolly slipped one problem to the trade paper editors over a luncheon table.

It appears that the tax committee of some body styling itself rather impressively the National Industrial Conference Board had prepared a tentative set of recommendations to Congress. And said report contains a gentle suggestion that the motion picture rental tax be doubled from five to ten per cent.

Nowhere in the report could we find a tax recommended that would directly affect the honored members of the dignified committee.

At first thought of such unequalled gall we naturally got all riled up. Pettijohn assured us that the heavily-titled body was apt to be taken seriously at Washington. We prepared to roll up our own sleeves and declare war with all the black type in the case. We had visions of a full-page rippity-bang slam this week.

Then we thought it over and the more we thought the less important the National Industrial Conference Board seemed to be. So we decided to give the page over to kidding the report—letting the staff cartoonist do most of the work.

But there were too many days between the lunch and press time. The more we thought about the position of a body of men appearing before Congress to say, "Here is an impartially prepared report showing how you can get a lot of money by taxing everybody BUT US," the more we wanted to laugh.

And we worked up a grouch at ourselves at having been tempted to waste a page of space on the gentlemen. And we're sore as the devil now because mental mathematics has shown us that they have got away with six inches or so.

BUT the space isn't entirely wasted if it serves to introduce our own conclusion that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is on the right track now and moving forward. The greatest "eleventh hour" industry in the world seems destined to enter this year's legislative campaigns before the battles are over. After having wallowed in our own blood a few years tasting the joys of "standing with our backs to the wall" we are going to try to get around early enough to see what started the fight.

It's a darn cheerful feeling to be able to say something good about the National Association. May we repeat the dose many times during the coming year.

BATTLE lines are already being drawn for the Blue Sunday fight. You can't get Bill Brady to talk about much else these days. Tuesday of the week we heard enthusiastic plans for a monster conference of all business and amusement interests affected by the Blue Sunday agitation to be held in New York December 14, 15 and 16. Later we received notice of a special National Association meeting on the matter scheduled for December 3rd. All week there have been cheerful reports of a line-up of interests on this and other legislative questions between the exhibitor organization and the manufacturers.

One important point in the plans for a battle against the salaried agitators for a Blue Sunday has been called to our attention by Harry Crandall. Tracing the history of the various reform movements of the past several years, it can be seen that the first shot was always aimed at the District of Columbia.

The Doctor Wilbur Crafts and others are a crafty political crowd. They find it comparatively easy to slip over their freak legislation as a local matter for the District of Columbia—which has no votes and to which legislators hold no personal responsibility. The District is the entering wedge; success here leads on to success in the nation; failure here could stop many a reform movement in its tracks.

It looks as though the Sunday battle will see its first stages in the District. And it behooves exhibitors and manufacturers to consider this the national issue.

TURNING to the note-book we find several interesting items. Harold Horton, traveler and explorer, opened the door to the NEWS office this week after two years in the Orient and South Seas—thirty-six thousand miles of travel. Through twenty-two countries, using seventeen different modes of conveyance. One river trip that totaled fifteen hundred miles alone.

And here's a tip: He got us all excited over a special picture he has made which will soon be announced and shown to the trade. Something brand new!

William A. Johnston's "Snapshots" note-book lies before us and we see two items that shouldn't wait till next week to see print. Here they are:

Ben Blumenthal. Note by a photo in New York American he has introduced "Sandwich" girls in Berlin to advertise picture show at his Scala theatre. Blumenthal already has seven first-run theatres in Central Europe—Berlin, Vienna, Budapest. Is adding more to chain. Runs his houses American style. German embargo on American film to be partially lifted (10 per cent) January 1st. Predicts gradual increase. Says theatres must have American picture. German production voluminous but poor.

George Davis. Good man with a good picture—Isobel—which was shown at Astor last week and got most favorable comment. One of Curwood's best picture stories. Striking situations, rattling action, suspense and unexpected climax. Production has followed book faithfully. State right market to be congratulated in getting so good a picture.

The meeting will be held on December 14th, and promises to be one of the most important ever held between exhibitors and representatives of other branches of the industry.

Berman, Secretary to the committee.

"As you look over the names of the committee," wrote Mr. Cohen to Mr. Brady, in arranging for the conference, "you will see that practically every part of the country is represented and that some of the members will have to travel a considerable distance to come to this city. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will not feel justified in asking these men (who serve without compensation) to leave their business and give their time and personal attention to organization matters unless we can be assured that an opportunity will be afforded to the members of this committee to take up questions of the first importance with the manufacturers and distributors composing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Among these questions that call for definite settlement I may mention that the problem of uniform and equitable contracts, the use of non-taxable music in arranging scores for pictures, the deposit question and kindred matters. The right of the exhibitor to have his deposits and advance payments properly secured and safeguarded has been translated into legislation in the State of New York. As you no doubt are aware, similar legislation will be proposed in other states. Would it not be good business all around if your association, co-operating with out committee, can find some method of securing and safeguarding the exhibitors' deposits? This is an absolute necessity, as witness the recent bankruptcies of various film concerns that have obtained money from exhibitors under the guise of deposits.

"I am quite sure that the menace of censorship can be effectively dealt with. I am in communication with exhibitors in the state which are now threatened with censorship. We have every definite plans as to the most effective way of fighting censorship. We believe that the first and most important thing is to educate the public and to make it clear, not only to the patrons of motion picture theatres, but to the public generally, that censorship means a dangerous innovation and a distinct threat to their personal liberty."

"Dangerous Business"

PETER J. BRADY of the New York State Federation of Labor and an ever loyal friend of the motion picture, writes us a vigorous protest against a film recently mentioned in newspaper dispatches from London, and which, according to the dispatches, deals with a "faked" raid by Sinn Feiners and their dispersal by British soldiers.

We have no further information about this alleged picture, and we strongly doubt that anyone would be guilty of so unfortunate an enterprise. It is well, however, to state that the screen wants no pictures whatsoever of such character. No exhibitor would willingly run such a picture; and every exhibitor will do well to watch carefully provided any picture at all of this nature is put in circulation.

Hart Is Awarded Verdict in Suit Against Ince

A wire received from Los Angeles informs that William S. Hart has been awarded a verdict in the Superior Court against Thomas H. Ince for half profits accrued for the quarter beginning at the expiration of the Ince-Hart contract on July 13, 1919, and ending October 13, 1919. The amount awarded is $87,779, the half profits shown by the court accountant appointed as auditor.

The verdict just handed down means that the William S. Hart contract for half profits is valid. It is estimated that the profits accruing since October will amount to nearly a million dollars. The suit relates to sixteen pictures which were made and released by Artcraft prior to July of 1919. The action has nothing to do with Mr. Hart's present contract for nine pictures.

Case Against Blank Enterprises Ruled Out

Judge A. M. Post in District Court at Columbus, Neb., took the Swan vs. A. H. Blank Enterprises case from the jury and decided there was no cause of action as against James M. Martin, local manager for Blank, and named as one of the defendants. This automatically throws the case out of court, as the other defendants were all non-residents and not liable in this court.

The case was brought under the Judkin's anti-trust act and the amount of damages asked was $324,000. Swan alleges there was conspiracy on the part of the Omaha Film Board of Trade, the Blank Enterprises and numerous film corporations to blacklist him and put him out of business. When he could not get services he leased his theatre to A. H. Blank for a period of ten years.

Lee S. Ferguson Goes to First National

Lee S. Ferguson will become actively associated with First National Exhibitors Circuit December 1, in C. L. Yearsley's department.

The announcement was made just as Ferguson had rounded out a year with Selznick Enterprises, the latter half of which he was Director of Publicity. Prior to that he was connected with the Motion Picture News.

More Films for Britain

D. W. Fish, formerly connected with Famous Players-Lasky, is to sail for England in three weeks' time to sell there on the open market three American pictures. He intends to open an office in London. He is staying in New York at the Hotel Astor.

Arthur Woods on the Job

Col. Arthur Woods

COL. ARTHUR WOODS, formerly police commissioner of the city of New York, this week accepted the chairmanship of the Americanism Committee of the Motion Picture Industry. He succeeds the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, formerly Secretary of the Interior, who has had to give up all active work on account of ill health.

Before accepting the chairmanship of the committee Colonel Woods insisted that conferences should be held with the leaders of the industry to determine whether or not they wished to continue the campaign for another year. Conferences were arranged by President William A. Brady of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the leading producers. It was unanimously agreed that the work should continue. Conferences between Colonel Woods and the editors of the news weeklies and also the editors of the trade papers were held and all agreed to give him their heartiest co-operation in the movement.

The news weeklies are carrying each week a picture of a title suggesting some spirit of Americanism. They report this scene or title each week to the headquarters of the committee where it is filed. The news weeklies also are arranging special patriotic stunts.

The editors of the trade papers have agreed to continue their support to the movement. The producers have agreed to continue the making of special Americanism pictures and they decided that there should be injected into every picture some ideas that would make better Americans.

"Better Picture Circuit" to Be Incorporated

Incorporation papers have been filed at Albany, N. Y., for the organization of the "Better Picture Circuit." This will be an offshoot of the Motion Picture Theatrical Association of the World, of which J. A. Quinn is the president. The announced purpose of the new organization is to operate as a central, neutral body between the motion-picture industry and the public with a view to improve the general conditions within the industry and promote co-operation to the end that "better pictures may be offered to the public at prices within reach of the family pocket-book."

Two years ago, Mr. Quinn launched the "Better Picture Movement" at Los Angeles. The organization of the Motion Picture Theatrical Association of the World followed, the expressed object being to work through this organization with the public, the industry and the press in stabilizing general conditions.

The next step was the formation of the M. P. T. League for Better Pictures, membership in which is free to the public. League members are asked to carry on an individual campaign for those pictures endorsed by the League. The pictures so endorsed have been submitted to the M. P. T. Merit Board and awarded the M. P. T. Merit Seal.

The Better Picture Circuit will work in conjunction with the allied bodies already established; and its chief function, according to a statement just issued, "will be to work in a strictly neutral relation with all branches of the industry to bring about an equitable and economical distribution of worthy pictures." In addition to Frank Bacon and J. A. Quinn, the incorporators are Albany business men not previously identified with motion pictures.

Missouri Exhibitors Will Meet in January

The second semi-annual convention and business meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri has been called for January 11th and 12th at St. Louis, Mo.

At the first convention held in Moberly, on August 11th and 12th, fifty-five exhibitors were present and the organization, which now has a membership of close to two hundred, was formed. It is expected that more than three hundred will attend the coming convention, as business vital to the interests of every exhibitor in the state will be contracted.

Selling Classes Started in F.P.-Lasky Branches

Fred F. Creswell, field sales supervisor in charge of the new School of Salesmanship of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which was recently instituted in the New York office, is in Los Angeles, where he is now putting on a course at the local exchange. Later he will give a course at the exchanges in San Francisco, Portland, Denver, Salt Lake and other cities.

Scenario Writing Course at Temple University

Photoplay study and scenario writing as a university course will be inaugurated through the co-operation of the Stanley Company of America at Temple University with the beginning of the new year. In memory of the pioneer of the cinema theatre in Philadelphia the department at the Broad and Berks Streets University will be named "The Stanley V. Mastbaum Course in Photoplay Study and Scenario Writing."

Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company, is responsible for the inauguration of this course. His acquaintance with the host of prospective screen stories returned by studios to writers because of the lack of technical training on the part of amateur, and even professional, authors, is the source from which sprung Mr. Mastbaum's decision to have introduced a photoplay study and scenario writing course at the Temple University. According to Mr. Mastbaum, the rejected writings often contain excellent ideas, which, if properly developed, would result in splendid screen plays, but the crude and amateurish presentation of these stories to producers at once disqualifies them for acceptance.

"The course which Temple University is to establish would seem to meet that need for instruction that ambitious writers for the screen require in order to secure a reading for their works," declares Mr. Mastbaum.

"Never has there been such a demand for scenarios that will please the public. Film companies are always looking for new and original material, and they are willing to pay the highest prices if they can secure it, plus the technical details so necessary in constructing a story for the screen."

The Stanley Company of America will support the course and should it prove successful will undoubtedly arrange to endow a permanent chair for the instruction of this art at Temple.

Nat'l Ass'n Considers Blue Law Agitation

A special meeting of all of the members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held at the offices of the Association, 1520 Broadway, New York City, on Friday, December 3rd.

Consideration was given to the agitation created by the Lord's Day Alliance and other organizations for federal censorship of motion pictures and the closing of the theatres on Sunday.

Robertson-Cole a Member of Nat'l Ass'n

The Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation is the latest film distributing company to join the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Marguerite Clark Returns to Screen!

MARGUERITE CLARK'S first independent screen production, "Scrambled Wives," is to be released through Associated First National. This announcement is made by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., in a statement to the effect that her first production as an independent star is nearly completed. A few exterior scenes are all that is necessary to complete the picture, ready to be turned over to First National for distribution.

Since her last production there have been rumors that Miss Clark intended to retire from the screen and statements to that effect have even been attributed to Miss Clark herself. That they were wholly unfounded is established by her positive statement that she never had any intention of deserting the screen, but that when her last contract expired she had decided to enter the field of independent production.

When the contract expired and after a short vacation the Marguerite Clark Productions Company was organized, a considerable period prior to starting production was devoted to a search for a thoroughly suitable story to warrant the beginning of actual studio work. "Scrambled Wives," which enjoyed a run on Broadway in New York, and is still running in Chicago, was selected as the vehicle in which Miss Clark would make her debut, and once selected no time was lost in the beginning of the screening.

Edward H. Griffith was secured as director with A. F. Bernadac as assistant. Naturally Miss Clark takes the role of Mary Lucille Smith, and those in the supporting cast are Leon P. Gendron, Ralph Bunker, Florence Martin, Virginia Lee, Alice Mann, Frank Badgley, America Cheddister, John Mayer, John Washburn, T. A. Braldon, Harry Fisher, Wesley Jenkins, Ada Neville and Emma Wilcox.

The present agreement is for the release of one production only by Associated First National. There is no announcement as to what the next production starring Miss Clark will be, for it is stated that the star does not intend to rush work on schedule. Sufficient time will be taken on all productions to make the selection one in which she feels personally that she can do her best, and which provides for adequate handling in other details.

"Scrambled Wives" is from the pens of Adelaide Matthews and Martha Stanley, and the scenario was prepared by Gardner Hunting. The role of Mary Lucille Smith is of the same nature as those which made Miss Clark one of the best liked stars on the screen.

Most of the filming of the play was done in New York City with the old Biograph studio as the headquarters for the interior sets. In the preparation of the scenes Miss Clark practised a theory she has held for some time that "standard" sets often spoil a good story. To guard against the use of settings of the same style that may have appeared in other productions she secured Walter E. Keller, William C. Menzes and David C. Flynn to originate and supervise a complete arrangement of sets for the entire picture.

The taking of the few scenes which are needed to complete the production and the subsequent cutting are expected to be completed by Christmas so that the production will be delivered to Associated First National Pictures, Inc., by New Year's.

Rudolph Not Connected with Detroit Showing

The November 27th issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS erroneously gave the credit for the successful presentation of "Madonnas and Men," at the Madison theatre in Detroit recently, to Bill Rudolph. Mr. Rudolph was in charge of the presentation of the Jans feature at the Strand theatre in Toronto, Canada, during the week of November 21st.

About Rental Prices

"Are Rentals Out of Focus?" we asked some few weeks ago. The replies from small exhibitors were quick to tell us that they were.

Al Lichtman spoke up on behalf of the sales managers and explained his corporation's method of meeting present rental problems with justice to all classes of exhibitors.

Next week we will have still further interesting chapters in this discussion. George Meeker has responded to our invitation with a contribution that is certain to arouse discussion. Then there are snappy letters from exhibitors and other worth while side lights.

Heavy Demand for Tickets to Big Movie Ball

The allotment of boxes for the ball and entertainment of the Chamber of Commerce is taking place this week with the demand threatening to consume the supply even before a chance is given outside patrons. The ball will be held at the Hotel Astor in New York on January 5.

The unusual feature of the affair will be the Midway Plaisance, composed of high-class county fair attractions conducted by real outdoor showmen and characterized by many quaint and picturesque features. A giant crystal maze, a gig-saw house of mystery and about fourteen other mysterious affairs will be seen on the midway.

Already demands for tickets and boxes have been received from Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Cleveland, Washington and Pittsburgh.

The Chamber of Commerce has opened an office at the Hotel Astor, from which place the ball committees will work and at which they can be addressed.

Britain Flooded with Film

J. C. Graham

THE most serious problem confronting the British exhibitor today is the lack of high-grade theatres, in the opinion of John Cecil Graham, managing director of the Famous Players Film Company, Ltd., Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., and the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., who came to New York from London last week on his annual business trip to the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Approximately 1,500 new theatres must be built before the competitive exhibition of motion pictures can be undertaken on the scale which will best appeal to the British imagination, in his opinion.

"Great Britain is an island entirely inundated with film," said Mr. Graham in discussing business conditions abroad. "Not only are more American and foreign films coming into the market, but the British producers have been increasingly active. The result is that the British industry has a vast amount of film for which it can find no immediate use. With all of these resources to choose from, the exhibitor has no difficulty in arranging his program, and most of them are booked up far in advance.

"The problems confronting the British industry today are mainly the outgrowth of the war, but will be solved once the shortage in theatres is corrected. At the present time there are about 3,800 motion picture theatres of all classes, catering to a population of 46,000,000.

"It is probable that the Government may relax its restrictions against so-called luxury construction work during the coming year, but this will by no means eliminate all of the difficulties. Building materials and labor are still scarce and it will take some time to complete a building program of the magnitude I have suggested.

"Competitive showmanship will follow on a much more important scale than at present, once the British industry is well supplied with theatres.

Will Indianapolis Shut Down on Sunday Movies?

Indianapolis exhibitors and vaudeville house managers have been waiting with much trepidation for possible orders from city authorities to close all theatres on Sunday as a result of the action of Glen E. Black, manager of the Park theatre, a local burlesque house, in continuing to put on his regular burlesque program on Sunday despite police orders to the contrary. Street clothes for the actors and vaudeville acts only, were the requirements stipulated by the police for Black to remain open. He obeyed instructions for one Sunday; but on learning that every vaudeville house in the city was going ahead as usual without police interference, Black decided to put on his regular bill on Sundays. As yet no further action has been taken by the police in restraining Black or clamping the lid on the other forms of amusement in the city.

The fear that Black's action might result in bringing the lid down on everybody results from the fact that photoplay and vaudeville houses have been operating for more than a year merely by virtue of Mayor Charles W. Jewett's sufferance. Several months ago, when the church federation tried to have all Sunday amusements closed, the mayor refused to be argued into shutting up the "movies." He did, however, decree that the regular vaudeville, burlesque and legitimate shows should not be given on the first day of the week.

The legitimate houses have never attempted to open, except for classical concerts and the like given now and then on Sunday afternoons; and the burlesque people have made no attempt until Black's. The vaudeville managers gradually transformed the musical and movie programs which they started out with under the mayor's edict until for several months they have been going ahead as usual.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana believe the time is ripe for a movement to get a bill legalizing Sunday movies.

Reception of Loew Stars in Canada Criticized

Criticism of the attention which has been showered upon the twelve moving pictures actresses who had accompanied Marcus Loew to Ottawa and Montreal for the opening of the new Loew theatre in the Capital and for a visit to the Montreal Loew theatre, has continued in both cities of the Dominion. In both centres immense crowds had turned out to greet the screen celebrities and there was a variety of receptions, luncheons and other events, but wide and numerous complaints were made by various interests regarding the stunts.

Col. George Ham, a prominent citizen of Montreal, declared, in a public utterance on November 17, that Mayor Mederic Martin "made a laughing stock of the city, as the people had done for the city of Ottawa."

According to a statement of William Goldman, manager of the seventeen first run theatres controlled by the Famous Players-Lasky Missouri Corporation in St. Louis, more than $400,000 will be expended during the next twelve months for advertising and publicity purposes. This sum will be appropriated merely for the houses in the city of St. Louis alone and will not go toward the expenditure of theatres owned by the corporation outside of this city. The statement was made public November 20.

The great proportion of the advertising will be done in local newspapers and advertising matter is being prepared for several series of whole page ads. More than 1,000 billboards will be erected in and about the city displaying posters of the week's presentations.

The theatres to be benefited by this mammoth appropriation are: Missouri, Del Monte, Kings, Mozart, Pershing, King's Airdome, Lindell, Arco, Novelty, Gravois, Grand-Florrisant, Juniata, Shenandoah, Maffitt, Lafayette, Lowell, and the new Criterion, which will open approximately December 15.

British Picture Showing in Canada; More Due

Moving picture features from England have been receiving serious consideration in Eastern Canada recently, and the invasion of the Canadian market by the British producers now seems to be really under way. Good use is apparently being made with a truly good English release to pave the way for developments, this being the Hepworth picture, "Alf's Button," which has already secured considerable success in Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto. There is a general tendency to compare this picture with "The Better 'Ole," and it is freely declared on all sides that the "Button" is better than the "'Ole."

The premier Canadian run for "Alf's Button" was held at the Holman theatre, Montreal, where it was presented for eight days, the engagement terminating on November 28. It was then transferred to the Centre theatre, Ottawa, a large downtown house, where it was shown for the whole week of November 29 at prices ranging up to 45 cents, this being the regular scale. This seven-reel picture has also had its first presentation in Toronto.

Prior to its presentation in Montreal Col. Ernest Chambers of Ottawa, a prominent official of the Canadian House of Commons, delivered a speech at a gathering of exhibitors, reviewers and others who had assembled for a pre-release screening of "Alf's Button" immediately before the Holman theatre engagement in which he declared that his associates on the directorate of the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Limited, Montreal and London, England, were prompted more by patriotic motives in bringing British pictures to Canada than by any thought of possible commercial gain.

Adolph Zukor Predicts a Year's Run on Broadway

Paramount Chief Sees Longer Stay for High Class Pictures

A YEAR'S run on Broadway, New York!

Such, in the opinion of Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will be nothing uncommon for the high-class motion picture of the future.

"There are policies of the past and of the future," said the motion picture executive on his arrival at Los Angeles for his annual visit at the West Coast plant of the corporation. "The individual or group aided by policies of the past fails. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has adopted a policy of the future in deciding to eclipse all previous screen efforts by concentrating in one production the best of actors, of writers and directors.

"Why should a picture run one week in a first-run house and then be forgotten? We hope to produce pictures that will run for weeks and weeks—for a year on Broadway, New York. There will be no release date to meet. There will be no such limitations as in the past may have been placed on production. There will be but one consideration—to make the highest class picture money and brains can make. Why not, then, a run of a year on Broadway, New York?"

In enthusiastic terms Mr. Zukor tells of the change in production methods worked out by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of Famous Players-Lasky production.

"It is not a hope for increased revenue that prompted us to make the change," he said. "Rather, it is pride in our profession. To make the best picture that can be made—surely that is a worth while ambition.

"It is that same pride in their profession that has prompted our stars to tell me how gladly and willingly they will co-operate in the innovation. I have talked with them all—Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson, Dorothy Dalton, Thomas Meighan, Elsie Ferguson, in fact with all of them. Willing to co-operate? Why, they are enthusiastic about it. They all are big enough to see that having a part in a combination of people of great talent and equal rank is not a detriment, but a great advantage to them. They see the possibilities of the new policy. Pride in their work and in their profession causes them to welcome the opportunity to do better work in better productions. Their attitude, to me, is the most gratifying of all.

"I am a dreamer, I presume. But all who try to look ahead are dreamers. Some have the faculty of making their dreams come true—that is the only difference between dreamers.

Mr. Zukor believes that the educational possibilities of the screen are tremendous. "But," he stated, "I prefer to entertain rather than educate. I believe that by furnishing clean, wholesome, meritorious entertainment I can do more real good for humanity than by trying to teach. However, I do not mean to minimize the screen's future in the field of education."

"Motion pictures are being taken seriously," he continued, "by those who first refused to give us serious consideration. The reason for this, I believe, is the determination of some producers to ally with themselves the very best brains in every branch of endeavor—in writing, in art, in costuming, in acting, in directing, in editing.

"The effect of our securing a number of famous authors, novelists and playwrights, to write exclusively for Paramount Pictures—writers with reputations such as Sir James M. Barrie, Sir Gilbert Parker, Edward Knoblock, Elinor Glyn, Henry Arthur Jones, Avery Hopwood, and others of equal fame—will be tremendous. Mr. Lasky is to be given full credit for succeeding in inducing the splendid galaxy of British writers to contribute to our photoplays. While, as I say, the direct effect will be powerful in the extreme, the indirect effect will be even greater. One cannot overestimate the importance of this upon the public—including the thinking public—and its attitude toward the motion picture.

Mr. Zukor's stay in Los Angeles will be short. "One of my chief duties here," he said, "will be to discuss with Sid Grauman his plans for the Metropolitan theatre, in which I am interested. This, without a doubt, will be one of the most handsome and magnificent theatres in all the world, and I am here to aid Mr. Grauman in every way possible to bring about the realization of his ambition to give Los Angeles a truly wonderful temple of the cinema art.

"And, of course, I am watching with unusual interest the splendid progress being made by Cecil B. DeMille in his preparations for the start of work on his production based on "The Affairs of Anatol." This picture will be the first under our new production policy of combining several stars in one super-cast and because of that is of epochal importance.

"Big people in big stories written by big authors and produced by big directors—that, in brief, is the foundation of our dream. As for the realization of our dream, only the public can be the judge. But I am a showman, and as a showman I know that the public must be given something different, something worth while, if the public's support is to be won. And as a showman I believe that we are about to give the public something that will win it."

Fire Does $20,000 Damage to Metro Office

DAMAGE amounting to $20,000 was done to the offices of the Metro Film Corporation in the Longacre Building, New York, and a valuable, specially prepared print of "Polly With a Past" destroyed, when, during the first showing of the picture in the Metro projection room on Wednesday, December 1, one of the reels caught fire.

Within ten minutes the offices were all in flames, the operator having thrown the burning film out of his cage into an adjoining room.

The Metro employees filed out of the offices and into the elevators, which were kept running, without disorder.

Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro; W. E. Atkinson, general manager, and Jack Meador, publicity and advertising director, were viewing the picture which, aside from "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," is said to be the biggest Metro production of the year, when the fire occurred. It has not been determined how the film caught fire.

As the flames spread, the operator attempted to put them out with a fire extinguisher. He was in danger of being overcome, when led from the offices by President Rowland.

The building in which the Metro offices are located is in the "danger area" of Broadway, and all available fire apparatus were called out.

The Metro office will have to be entirely renovated.

O'Crowley Made Manager of Big Fabian House

Jacob Fabian, owner of the First National franchise for the state of New Jersey, and president of the Branford Theatre, Inc., builders of the new million dollar Branford theatre in Newark, N. J., announces the appointment of Richard J. O'Crowley, Jr., as managing director of his new theatre.

Mr. O'Crowley is a former newspaperman and had many years' experience in editorial work. He was also house manager of Proctor's theatre in Newark.

Swedish Film Men Study Conditions in New York

H. Gustafson and Ragnar Friberg, of Stockholm, Sweden, arrived in New York City the week of November 22nd, to study conditions in the film industry here. They are representatives of Aktiebolaget Films, which has been releasing Paramount pictures. Mr. Gustafson will remain in this country as the representative of his company, while Mr. Friberg returns home this week.

Do Producers Aim for Smaller Houses?

Geo. W. Trendel, secretary and general manager of Kunsky Enterprises of Detroit, takes exception to the opinion of a small exhibitor recently published in the News, who believed that the film producers make productions for big theatres only.

"I find in booking pictures for one-week runs," writes Mr. Trendel in a letter to William A. Johnston, "that almost invariably the exchangeman comes in with a seven-reel production which should have been made in five, and I am met with the statement that the producer insists on turning out long subjects because they can get more money from the small exhibitor for a seven-reel picture than they can for a five-reel production.

"I believe that 99 per cent of the exhibitors running full week attractions prefer a five-reel feature to a seven-reel one, as it enables them to give a variety of entertainment at a two-hour show, which they cannot possibly do when the picture stretches over 5,500 feet.

"Can you get any of the larger exhibitors interested to a point where they would be willing to discuss the matter through your publication?"

State Franchise Holders Meet in Indianapolis

Associated First National franchise holders from all over Indiana were in attendance at the first meeting and dinner of the Associated First National, of Indiana, at the Athenaeum in Indianapolis on November 18th.

Robert Lieber, president of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and also president of the Indiana organization, presided at the meeting. In a forceful manner Mr. Lieber traced the growth of First National from its beginning to the present time, and told of the reasons for the granting of franchises in Associated First National Pictures, Inc. He said the organization would always stand for fair treatment and high standards of production and characterized it as a form of insurance for the independent exhibitor against trusts and other interests seeking to control the exhibiting of pictures throughout the country.

An advisory committee, which eventually will become the board of directors of the Indiana organization, was named by Mr. Lieber as follows: A. F. Brentlinger, of the Orpheum theatre, Fort Wayne; C. E. Potts, of the Blackstone theatre, South Bend; H. H. Johnson, the new Mars theatre, Lafayette; Robert Harris, the Harris-Grand theatre, Bloomington; B. C. Kixmiller, the Colonial theatre, Bicknell; Ivan Arnold, the Isis theatre, Kokomo, and Frank J. Rembusch, the Alhambra theatre, Shelbyville.

Other addresses were made at the meeting by Col. Fred Levy, of Louisville, holder of the Associated First National franchise in Kentucky; Samuel Katz, of the firm of Balaban & Katz of Chicago, which has the Associated First National franchise for Illinois; E. Mandelbaum, of Cleveland, holder of the Associated First National franchise for Ohio, and Leo Rappoport, of Indianapolis, a director of the Circle theatre.

Col. Levy told of his experience in booking pictures before he became interested in Associated First National, which he characterized as one of the greatest assets an exhibitor can have.

Other speakers were Messrs. Katz, Mandelbaum, and Rappaport.

State Bureau Reports on Situation in New York

Data compiled by the New York State Bureau of Municipal Information in cooperation with the State Conference of Mayors, relative to the Sunday motion picture situation in this state, has been put in the form of a report just issued. The State Conference of Mayors, with headquarters in this city, has been behind a great deal of the legislation during the last two or three years.

The following cities had permitted their motion picture theatres to open on Sunday before the law was enacted:

Amsterdam, Buffalo, Batavia, Dunkirk, Fulton, Glen Cove, Glens Falls, Hornell, Jamestown, Lockport, Lackawanna, North Tonawanda, New York City, Niagara Falls, Oneida, Olean, Rochester, Syracuse, Salamanca, Tonawanda, Troy, White Plains and Yonkers.

Since the law was passed efforts have been made in Oneida, Corning, Amsterdam and Jamestown to have the common council enact an ordinance prohibiting the operation of motion picture theatres on Sunday. In all cities the effort has failed to date.

Since the law was enacted, the following cities have passed ordinances permitting motion picture theatres to operate on Sunday:

Auburn, Norwich, Corning, Cohoes, Binghamton, Hudson, Ithaca, Oswego, Saratoga, Mount Vernon, Utica, Beacon, Watertown and Schenectady. Binghamton later rescinded this ordinance.

In Watertown, the council passed the ordinance over the veto of the Mayor.

Out of the remaining cities in which motion picture theatres are not now open on Sunday, no action has been taken on any ordinance by Albany, Canandaigua, Cortland, Johnstown, Mechanicville, Middletown, Newburgh, New Rochelle, Ogdensburg, Poughkeepsie, Plattsburg, Rome, Rensselaer, Sherrill, Watervliet, Port Jervis and Elmira.

In the following cities ordinances have been passed prohibiting the opening of motion picture houses on Sunday:

Geneva, Gloversville, Kingston and Oneonta.

Toronto Exhib. Addresses Zukor on Competition

H. Ginsler, owner of the Iola theatre, Toronto, Canada, complains of the building of a theatre in his district by the Famous Players-Lasky Canadian Corporation, which, when completed in December, will be in direct opposition to him, states Mr. Ginsler.

In a letter, dated September 10th, Mr. Ginsler brought the situation to the attention of Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Ginsler's letter reads in part as follows:

"It is my understanding that you control the operation of the Famous Lasky Film service in Canada. Your statements announce that it is the policy of your Company to build houses only where you cannot secure a fair representation for your pictures.

"By referring to the records of your Toronto exchange, you will find that I have used your service exclusively when these pictures were presented for my purchase, and I feel sure that if you will secure a conscientious statement from the manager of your Toronto exchange, you will find that the friendliest relations exist, and that I have given them every possible consideration, yet Mr. Zukor, the Famous Players-Lasky Canadian Corporation are building a house which will be completed in December, which is in direct opposition to me."

Eugene Zukor, assistant to Adolph Zukor, replied to Ginsler in a letter, dated September 17th:

"I have submitted all particulars to Mr. Nathanson and believe he will communicate with you within a few days."

After an interval, the following was received by the News from Mr. Ginsler under the date of October 30th:

"It would appear from his reply that he was trying to evade the issue and place the responsibility upon other people's shoulders. Mr. Nathanson, to whom he refers, is his Canadian representative and I might add that Mr. Nathanson has not seen fit to answer my letter or visit me; hence the action. The matter still remains in abeyance."

Then followed a visit of a News representative to the New York headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to secure an explanation of the case. Henry L. Saulsbury, of the real-estate office, addressed Mr. Nathanson of the Toronto office on the subject with a view to obtain all the details. Following is the explanation made by Mr. Nathanson to Mr. Saulsbury of the home office:

"Mr. Eugene Zukor had already referred this letter to me and, as I have advised him there is of course no grounds whatever for Mr. Ginsler's complaint.

"You will quite understand that the American Company should not be held responsible for the actions of the Canadian Company, as the policies of this company are after all decided by the directors and are not governed by any policy which may have been adopted by the New York Company.

"In this instance we regret the fact that we will be in competition with Mr. Ginsler, who has a very small theatre seating less than 600 in this populous locality; but following the plans of the company, and in consideration of the present and future growth of that section of the city, it was decided to erect a large, modern theatre.

"Mr. Ginsler has not been an exclusive customer of our exchange by any means. He has purchased from us about one-third of his requirements and we have been selling pictures to his competitors at the same time, so I cannot see that he has any cause for complaint. We are still doing business with him and I have no doubt that we can arrange to have him remain quite happy and continue to do business with our company."

Sol Lesser Not to Quit First National

Sol Lesser, whose split from the interests of his brother, Irving, was announced in last week's trade papers, states that the announcement has been misunderstood in some quarters. Mr. Lesser states that he has no intention of quitting First National, as some believed.

From the heart of the storm a wrecked aeroplane crashed into Richard's lonely island. In it he found the woman he had loved from afar. Fate had thrown them together at last—but he found her now dressed in wedding fineries under her leather togs. Her mind had been reduced by the accident to that of a child, and he devoted all his love to win her back to herself. He had succeeded when the husband appeared. There was a fight on the edge of a cliff. Then—

'Unseen Forces" Is Set for December 6th

The Sidney A. Franklin Production, "Unseen Forces," being presented by Mayflower as a First National Attraction, is scheduled for release on December 6.

R. A. Walsh has finished cutting and titling "Idols," filmed from the William J. Locke story of that name, and it will be presented through First National by Mayflower as Walsh's second independent production. If present plans are carried out at the First National office, "Idols" will be released shortly after the first of the year.

To Start Guinan Pictures

Victor Kremer Announces First of Series Will Start in January

VICTOR KREMER, President of Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., announced this week that production on the first of the series of Texas Guinan society-western dramas will begin early in January. All necessary arrangements have been completed.

Mr. Kremer states that in spite of the talk of tight money, several state righters have already sent in bids for the entire series of Texas Guinan productions. They will all be made in California. The first four vehicles have already been selected, it is announced.

Mr. Kremer, it is said, is now directing his time and efforts to planning the production of a series of "super-features." These productions, it is claimed, will feature a star of wide reputation. Negotiations for the leasing of a studio in New York are under way, it is stated. It is believed that actual work on these pictures will be started in January and that they will be ready for distribution some time in March.

Three Broadway Houses Show Urban Pictures

Charles Urban's pictures were in three of the principal Broadway houses last week. At the Capitol theatre there was the Kineto Review, No. 18, and at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, Dr. Riesenfeld is showing the Movie Chats.

The Kineto Review at the Capitol is a marine number that describes pictorially the trip of Dr. Epitacio Pessoa from Brooklyn to Brazil, shortly after he was elected President of that country. Director Rothafel has presented it in feature form with a singing number as a prologue.

At the Rivoli are the pet animal pictures from Charles Urban's Movie Chats No. 14.

Robertson-Cole Starts Scenario Department

Robertson-Cole has established at its studios in Hollywood a scenario department under the direction of J. Stewart Woodhouse and has started a survey of available stories for its various stars and producers.

Robertson-Cole will not rely entirely upon published novels and produced plays or upon original stories for its material. It will make selections from both.

"Salvage," which was written by Daniel F. Whitcomb, and "The Western Gate," an original story by M. C. Fletcher, have been purchased. They will be the bases for forthcoming Pauline Frederick productions.

"Good Women," by C. Gardner Sullivan, is another story which Robertson-Cole has just acquired. It is intended for one of the superspecials which is being made by Gasnier.

"Crook Melodramas" on Pathe List in Dec.

Pathe's New York headquarters has received highly favorable reports on "Dice of Destiny," starring H. B. Warner, following trade showings of this picture at various Pathe branch offices. This type of melodrama — which is commonly called the "crook melodrama"—is said by Pathe to be meeting with "continued favor." "Dice of Destiny" and the first episode of the new George B. Seitz serial, "Velvet Fingers," head the release schedule for Pathe for the week commencing December 5th. Both of these pictures have "gentlemen-crooks" as their heroes.

average business for a week. (Middle West.)

Doing good business second week. Everyone agrees it's the kind of picture to hold the attention spellbound. (Middle West.)

Always Audacious—

An unusually pleasing picture which ran to exceptionally big houses all week. Star an excellent drawing card. Everybody pleased. Good story, well done. (East.)

Wallace Reid is very popular with our patrons and "Always Audacious" pleased our audiences. Did good business for the week.

Entertaining picture. Business was very good during run. (West.)

The Round Up—

An old rail fence built in front of the theatre attracted attention. "Modern Centaurs" and Pathe News are unusual and helped put over the show with a bang. Average entertainment. (West.)

A Western melodrama of the old days, with specks of comedy. Plot a variation of "Enoch Arden." Lots of Indians, half-breeds, shooting and cavalry, and not so much of Arbuckle. He should stick to the short subjects. (Middle West.)

Idols of Clay—

Drew 13,000 paid admissions the day it opened. A wonderful drawing card. (South.)

Opening week equalled "On with the Dance." Held for second week. Picture makes 'em talk. (Middle West.)

Went over big. Certainly a sure fire production, both as to entertainment and box office value. (East.)

Civilian Clothes—

Broke all records on opening day. A wonderful feature, highly entertaining. (East.)

Mediocre picture lifted from mediocrity by good acting of Ethel Clayton and by splendid direction. (Middle West.)

Only fair business. No high points of interest. (East.)

Something to Think About—

Starts second week. Playing to big crowds. Expect to equal, if not exceed record made by "Humoresque," which ran for three weeks here. (Middle West.)

The Life of the Party—

A laugh-getting Arbuckle comedy which played to good business for one week with an increased attendance the last part of the engagement. (Middle West.)

The Frisky Mrs. Johnson—

Fairly good picture for those who like this star. Fair houses. (East.)

FIRST NATIONAL

The Scoffer—

Was liked by our patrons but did not provoke any great interest. (Middle West.)

The Jack Knife Man—

Started the week but pulled off Tuesday night. Old characters did not please. (Middle West.)

George H. Davis, who controls the rights to James Oliver Curwood's story "Isobel" announces this week the sale of three important territories to leading exchangemen. The First National Exhibitors Exchange of New York, with offices at 729 Seventh avenue, will release the feature in New York State; Sol Lesser will distribute it in California, Arizona and Nevada through the All-Star Feature Distributors; Phil Selznick, of Cleveland, has purchased Ohio; and Mike Rosenberg, general manager of De Luxe Film Exchange, of Seattle, bought the picture for Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana by wire, when he heard of Mr. Lesser's purchase. Mr. Davis states that he has received inquiries concerning "Isobel" from State Right buyers in every section of the country, and that he is now choosing the franchise holders himself in order that "Isobel" may be in the hands of the most representative men in each territory.

Stoll Representatives in Pathe Offices Dec. 6th

On the morning of Monday, December 6, eighty men will step into Pathe exchanges throughout the country as representatives of the Stoll Film Corporation of America. This sales force will be prepared within the week to show the exhibitors in their territory four products of the Stoll studios.

The first of these productions, as was stated last week, will be "Squandered Lives," an adaptation from "Duke's Son," by Cosmo Hamilton. It will be released January 2. Featured will be Ivy Duke and Guy Newall.

General Manager Ralph Proctor has made five more appointments as branch managers, leaving but two to be named. The five are: Little Rock, Leo Dennison; Butte, C. W. Koerner; Oklahoma City, T. R. Richards; Los Angeles, Howard Stubbins; Philadelphia, H. J. Elliott.

Schmidt and His "Shoppers Rest" Atlanta Theatre

Second Run House in Heart of Shopping District Operating With Success

THE Alamo No. 2, Atlanta, is perhaps the smallest first class house in town—and yet its box-office receipts, each night, compare quite favorably with some of the biggest. Why? George Schmidt, who is manager of the Alamo No. 2, has studied the psychology of his crowds—and he knows that his strongest appeal must be made to women. That's the beginning and the end of his reasoning—and one of the reasons for his success.

The Alamo No. 2 is in the heart of the shopping district. The first thing Manager Schmidt did, when he took over the management of this little theatre a year ago, was to nick-name it "The Shopper's Rest." That line always appears in all of his ads where the name of the theatre is mentioned. He has kept the by-line so constantly before the public that, whether they are conscious of it or not, they use it almost as much as he does.

"When I first took over this theatre," he said, "I used to stand out front and look at the people who passed by—it would take three people to keep anything like an accurate count of them. And then I'd go inside and look at the box-office totals. And then I'd look at the crowds some more."

To the average exhibitor, a house that seldom runs a "first run" picture is handicapped—at a disadvantage. But Mr. Schmidt's opinion is just the opposite. He has a chance to look over the pictures to find out what they are doing, to note their appeal to the people in "the other fellow's" house before he books them. And he gets the ideas for his very clever and inexpensive exploitation stunts from watching the picture in the other fellow's house.

Mondays, Tuesdays, Fridays and Saturdays are his strongest days; Wednesdays and Thursdays are the weakest, and when he is to play a picture that he isn't quite sure of, a picture of which he has the faintest doubt, he puts it on for his two weak days.

On Mondays and Tuesdays, he makes his strongest play for the women. For on those days, every merchant on Whitehall street has a sale on some particular line.

So, on Monday and Tuesday, a "woman play" holds the screen.

On Friday and Saturday, the chief crowds at the Alamo No. 2 are the suburban people—for Mr. Schmidt has figured out that certain car-lines that pass his door bring in certain classes of people, so he cannily plays to them. The Alamo No. 2 runs clear through the block, and on Fridays and Saturdays, two main car-lines bring in men from the railroad shops, boys from the Military Hospital and Fort McPherson, and so on. So Friday and Saturday see Westerns, strong adventure films, and plenty of good comedies.

On these four days, Mr. Schmidt usually manages to "pull" some odd little exploitation stunt. A few weeks ago, he resurrected an old Vitagraph picture, "413," a Charlie Chaplin comedy, and a reel of Timely Topics. He built a small engine of an old-fashioned type, of compoboard, had it realistically colored, and arranged a bit of mechanism which kept the wheels constantly revolving. This, appropriately mounted, attracted considerable attention. On the engine was the number "413" and the company name, "Seaboard." This, of course, called forth good natured railery and comment from rival railroad men—ever the most jealous of the rival merits of their companies—and all this resulted in interest that filled the theatre despite the fact that both pictures were "revivals."

Mr. Schmidt does not believe in newspaper advertising—at least, so far as his own theatre is concerned. He takes five and one-half inches every Sunday, and a two-inch box every day during the week. Were it not for dropping off the map entirely, as he phrases it, he would drop that even. He banks heavily on advertising by way of the screen, and by effective lobbies. And on the fact that the merchants' ads bring his people to town—and effective lobbies get them into his theatre.

The fact that, within a little less than a year, Mr. Schmidt has succeeded in completely "rehabilitating" the Alamo No. 2 and has now placed it on a sound, paying basis, is sufficient proof of his tactics. But the main consideration—the one without which no man can run a theatre successfully—is good pictures, knowing what your people want and giving it to them.

Rivoli Lighting Effects Unusual

THE "Hymn to the Sun" from the prologue of Mascagni's opera "Iris" is being used as an overture at the Rivoli for the current week with a very wonderful example of what can be accomplished with lighting effects in the way of embellishing a stage setting, the outstanding feature of the Japanese composition's rendition.

A very simple drop made of pleated muslin with a couple of decorative ideas of a futurist cast worked out is the background for the lighting effects. When the setting is first unveiled only a dull blue light is seen. This is in keeping with the theme of the prologue, which expresses the break of dawn. Gradually the degree of lighting is increased and the colors are blended to light pinks and scarlet to follow out the prologue theme further. On the "first rays" of the sun portion of the composition the Rivoli chorus takes up the text of the original opera and sings through to the finals. Anything like a comprehensive description of the stage setting is impossible. The whole thing is a matter of colored floods.

Brooklyn Strand Has Pleasing Ballet Number This Week

Manager Hyman is staging a ballet number at the Brooklyn Strand this week that is a decided novelty. Mr. Hyman and Balletmaster Paul Oscard reproduced the effect that one gets from certain Grecian frieze paintings. It was called "At the Fountain." The living picture revealed three Grecian maidens in filmy drapings gamboling around a playing fountain. The back drop was pastoral with patches of sky and much foliage. The dance was not fast, but simple and impressionistic. It indeed was soothing, a picture of a thousand years ago.

Colonial Theatre Celebrates Anniversary

The Colonial theatre, Germantown's largest playhouse, is celebrating its anniversary week by running "The Right to Love," supplemented by a fine musical program, whose special feature is a number of songs by the Stanley quartette which includes Emily Stokes Hagar, Bernard Poland, Marie Stone Langston and Reinold Schmidt. A specially selected surrounding bill also makes this week's features especially attractive, and is filling the large auditorium to overflowing each night.

Above is shown one of E. R. Rogers' lobby paintings for "Behold My Wife" when this picture played the Rialto theatre of Chattanooga, Tenn. The shadow box shown in the cut was seven feet wide by twenty feet long. In describing this exploitation stunt Manager Rogers advises as follows:

"All lighting effects used on the larger stages were used in this box, making this display a riot of color. Painted drops were used for background and the use of the miniature stage setting has been found to be most effective. We used real shrubbery and wings to complete the scheme, and the brilliant colors blended into a most pleasing picture."

This "The Silver Horde" display was obtained by the New theatre, Fort Smith, Ark.

A New "Married Life" Idea

Goodspeed Gets Grand Rapids Cooks Interested in Culinary Demonstration

PIES, cakes, doughnuts, biscuits, cookies, and other delicacies, all home-baked and all in the lobby of a motion picture theatre under glass covers. Will such a display attract attention?

J. W. Goodspeed, manager of the Isis theatre at Grand Rapids, Mich., will say so, and exhibit a box office report on a matinee performance that has set up a record for all time in that particular section of the American exhibiting field.

The lobby display resulted from an idea which came to Mr. Goodspeed when he tried to write a caption for a photograph of Ben Turpin to be used in a display advertisement for a showing of "Married Life."

"Hungry" was one of the adjectives that occurred to him as descriptive of the "matinee's idol" appearance, and that word changed the whole idea of the advertising campaign and originated one of the most appealing contests ever staged in Grand Rapids.

When the photograph of the intrepid Ben appeared in the newspaper it was over a line reading:

"Ben Turpin declares that poor cooking is the greatest propaganda for divorce, and proves it in 'Married Life.'"

Then came the announcement of an offer of prizes aggregating $50 and free tickets to the Isis, to Grand Rapids housewives who turned into the theatre the best samples of home cooking. The contest was based on good psychological grounds, for despite their present penchant for short skirts, jazz dances and a great many other things regarded by ministers as being inimical to home life, the American woman is inherently proud of her cooking ability.

Two things developed that Mr. Goodspeed had not expected. A large distributor of gas stoves arranged for cooperative window displays calling attention of women to the fact that his stoves would give them a better chance of winning the prize. A Grand Rapids firm of millers offered supplementary prizes of the winning concoctions. The event in this manner got triple the advertising Mr. Goodspeed had planned and two-thirds of it was free.

By the time the picture opened, enough entries had been displayed so that arranged on a table under glass they made a novel and tasty lobby display.

The prizes were awarded at the Wednesday matinee and the theatre was unable to hold the crowd that tried to get in. A teacher of domestic science and two newspaper men acted as judges, the teacher judging from a scientific standpoint and the newspapermen from a sense of taste and story value. All the entries were arranged on the stage and judging was all done in sight of the audience, which added greatly to the interest of the event.

The contest carried news of the pictures into homes that could not have been reached by any other means of exploitation and the week's business which resulted was a high mark for the theatre. Mr. Goodspeed is also convinced that it created a number of new regular patrons for his theatre.

McLaren's Prologue for "Homespun Folks"

An introduction to W. S. McLaren, manager of the Majestic theatre, Jackson, Mich., so far as exploitation goes, is something unnecessary for News readers. As a member of the Advisory Board Mr. McLaren has contributed many a story that aided his brother exhibitors in putting over the show, as will this account of what was done for the reecnt run of "Homespun Folks" at the Majestic, we feel sure.

Always a big user of newspaper space, McLaren plastered the town with paper on this picture and told the folks they were going to get something worth while in a prologue built around a professional quartette.

This quartette he secured through a vaudeville agency, dressed the stage up in a harvest setting, and had the quartette in farm costume. Opening to a dimly lighted stage, the quartette was heard in the distance singing "Auld Lang Syne;" then, as they came onto the stage and the lights worked up to full, a medley of "My Wife and I," "The Old Oaken Bucket," "Kentucky Babe," and "Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground" were sung, while for an encore, which was demanded at every show, the quartette returned and sang "Love's Old Sweet Song," the lights gradually lowering to permit dropping the screen and flashing the start of the picture just as the last strains of the song were dying out.

Needless to say, this staging helped wonderfully, and elicited much praise from the patrons. McLaren also cashed in, in a publicity way, by having this quartette booked in for a big Masonic vaudeville entertainment the week prior to the picture, and had them sing before clubs and other organizations during the week of the run, keeping them constantly in the newspapers during the run.

Ballet Number and Overture Synchronized

THE Capitol is synchronizing its overture and ballet number this week. For the overture the beautiful waltz intermezzo of "The Jewels of the Madonna" opera, placed in the original between the second and third acts, is being rendered. Without stilling the orchestra at the completion of the number, a silhouette dance under the title of "Silhouette Dance" is given by Mlle. Gambarelli, Alexander Oumansky and Doris Niles. The music for the ballet is the Felix Arndt fox trot, "Nola." The stage setting disclosed is very simple, a white muslin backing with a semi-transparent cut-out in front of it on which is thrown pink and blue floods at the outer edges. All foots and borders are killed and flood lightings so arranged as to bring the dancers into silhouette take their place.

Troy Theatre Ties Up with Navy

Because a picture has seen its halcyon days in the first run motion picture theatres no longer suffices as an excuse for failure to exploit it to every box-office possibility, especially if some new method of appropriate exploitation has been discovered since the film made its debut. It's never too late to spend money on exploitation if it offers more than a reasonable chance of multiplying itself.

This was the axiom demonstrated when "Below the Surface" showed at the American theatre, Troy, after having finished its first and second runs in that city. In the interim between showings, however, the virile succession of tie-ups with the U. S. Navy recruiting forces had been developed to a successful degree. As a result when "Below the Surface" had its run Harry Swift, exploitation representative for the Albany exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, arranged his exploitation with an eye to the facilities provided by the U. S. Navy recruiting service. Through the cooperation of the officer in charge he obtained the services of the company equipped in underwater suits, diving apparatus and the other paraphernalia essential to the submarine service and the plot of the picture.

The procession paraded the streets of Troy for four days before the picture commenced its run and for the entire time of its showing and attracted considerable attention. This was especially true during the hours of the feature picture on the program, when the company lined up before the theatre and gave an exhibition of underwater procedure as far as could be done without any water.

Although the company used signs that advertised the U. S. service they also exploited the picture in the catch line and served to arouse interest to the extent of a profitable engagement.

Strength of This Sampson Not in His Hair

Exhibitor Gives Rules for Running Small Town Theatre

"A STANDARD scale of prices, a standard grade of attractions, and well-played music."

Those are the three requisites of a small town exhibitor, according to R. S. Sampson, who has made a big success of the Princess theatre in Alexandria, Indiana.

"The small town differs greatly from the city, in that everybody known everybody and every local activity is regarded as being everybody's business," is the basis of Mr. Sampson's argument. "People don't carry money with them. They take enough from the houses to pay for the things they intend to do before they return home and leave the rest in the China sugar bowl. That is why a small town man who keeps varying his prices stirs ill will that he never knows about. People leave their homes with thirty cents to go to the pictures and have a soda, and when they find that they haven't the money to pay for both, because the theatre has raised its price, they are disgruntled.

"The small town exhibitor will find out that he can make friends and do better business by increasing the time he shows a picture, thereby saving in rental, instead of increasing the admission price as proof that the production is extraordinary.

"The exhibitor who makes three changes a week can do good business for four days on extraordinary attractions merely through the exploitation the picture gets by the honor of being an attraction singled out and recommended as being worthy of a longer run. Also, as a method of getting patronage, nothing that can beat gossip in a small town, and when you book a picture that can stand the talk, keep it on long enough to realize on the advertising your first night's audience will give it.

"A set standard of pictures is another necessity. In a small town, people don't hear a great deal about productions. You can fool them into coming for a cheap one, but you will have to spend more than you will save to get them in again. The small town man must remember that his patrons are dependent upon him for their ideas of pictures. A good picture can start the habit of theatre going and a bad picture destroys it. Every time a patron comes into my theatre I want him to go away with a desire to repeat the event, and unless I please him with the attraction I have he won't be planning to come again when he goes out.

"I cannot see the pictures before they come in. An exhibitor in my place has to have a guarantee of the worth of the attractions he books for he can't see them in advance. A bad picture will do more harm than a man can offset by six months advertising and high-priced productions.

"To the third point that I regard as essential. That is good music. Too many small town people use mediocre music. The small town oftentimes doesn't have the talent and because he feels that music is an essential, the exhibitor takes the best he can get. I think low grade music is worse than none at all. Poor playing while a feature is being shown spoils the enjoyment of your patrons. The music used during shows at the Princess all comes from a player piano. I take care in selecting the rolls. I have found that a high-grade player piano and many rolls can provide enjoyable music, and while I can't make the changes as rapidly as I would like in order to provide a wide range of incidental music, I can find rolls that fit with the picture better than amateur efforts to provide incidental music.

"A set scale of prices, a regular standard of consistently good pictures, and good music or none, and the small town exhibitor needs no sympathy from anybody."

Moore Gives "Kismet" Elaborate Presentation

Tom Moore is playing "Kismet" at his Rialto, Washington theatre, for a two weeks' engagement, after staging an exploitation campaign that set new records for the Capital City.

Mr. Moore's exploitation included a scheme leading all the way from the curb back to the stage. The door men were dressed in Arabian costumes, the cashier as well, and the ushers also joined in this scheme of costuming. On the stage was given a prologue in which Theodore Hardy and a supporting cast of local players appeared.

This carried to the audience the spirit of "Kismet," and was backed by a prologue stage setting in which the "Bagdad" of the feature is reproduced.

On either side of the stage of the Rialto stood enormous incense burners which cast the fragrance of their burning powder down over the heads of the audience. Special lighting, which had been arranged for in New York, was used to put on the prologue.

Costumes for the exploitation and presentation stunts were secured in New York, Washington costumers not having what Mr. Moore desired.

How Hyman Solves the "Lost and Found" Problem

Systematizing the irritating "lost and found" situation in a theatre has finally been worked out along the lines of what is considered a nearly model plan at the Brooklyn Strand theatre. With scores of articles being lost in the theatre at every performance, Manager Hyman decided that many patrons could either be cemented as real friends to the theatre, or could by undiplomatic handling be turned into enemies.

Mr. Hyman has formed a "Lost and Found" division. Every member of the Strand staff is an active member and there is a member of the executive staff in charge. Every member on the staff has been directed to return to the office each article found. If the owner's name and address is on the found article a polite letter is written after three days informing him or her of its whereabouts.

When an article has been lost and reported to the lost and found chief the ushers and employees are notified after the performances and a search is made for the article. Nine out of ten times it is returned.

In one week the Strand returns scores of articles through this system. In a recent week a diamond wedding ring lost in the lobby was returned to the rightful owner, as well as a fur worth several hundred dollars, a man's hat, eight wallets, etc.

"Very few articles are lost at the Strand which are not returned through some way," said Mr. Hyman. "It makes extra work, but it also produces friends."

The addition of the "Popular Pictures Index" as a regular feature of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau leads us to give credit to Earle S. Nesbitt, manager of the Linwood theatre, Tarkio, Mo., for the idea. Mr. Nesbitt told us how he filed the information contained in the trade papers for future use. We liked his plan and borrowed it with thanks and real appreciation.

"Engagement" Announcements as Exploitation Medium

Utica's ultra-smart society has received formal announcement of the engagement of Lady Rose's Daughter, according to reliable information furnished the News. The engagement was handsomely inscribed upon regular announcement stationery in the most correct society style.

The announcement was part of the exploitation engineered by Harry Swift, exploitation representative for the Albany territory, including Utica, of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, on "Lady Rose's Daughter," for the picture's engagement at the Avon theatre, Utica.

Swift, who writes a neat script, conceived the idea of making the picture a society event by sending out hand-written invitations for the showing of the picture, which read as follows:

"Lady Henry announces the engagement of the beautiful and talented Elsie Ferguson, Lady Rose's Daughter, at the home of the ultimate in motion pictures, the Avon theatre, in the city of Utica, Nov. the 18th, 19th and 20th."

The use of the name of Lady Henry, one of the characters in the picture, cleared Swift of attempt at subterfuge and gave an aristocratic tilt to the stunt. How effective it was, was evidenced by more than 100 replies which the mail man brought to the Avon theatre. Some of them were from fans who appreciated the unique angle, and wrote saying they would be certain to attend the picture.

Creston Exhibitors Claim They Lead the Procession

Iowa Showmen Think Theirs the Best Exhibitors Exploited City in Country

THE best exhibitor-exploited city in the United States.

This is the claim advanced for Creston, Iowa, by friends as well as managers of the two theatres that serve the 8,000 population with which Creston is credited in the last census.

They base the claim on the fact that the two managers within eight months have built up their two theatres to a point where the houses average a combined attendance daily of 1,600, or twenty per cent of the total population of the city in which they are located. In the course of a week, the two theatres combined collect 1 2-5 admissions from every man, woman and child accredited as a resident within the exhibiting territory.

The claim is interesting; but the story of the development of the two theatres within the past eight months, combined with the statistics as to what has been accomplished by the two exhibitors, would be an incentive to every other exhibitor everywhere as to the real drawing power of exploitation as applied to motion pictures.

In a position now where the two theatres serve in the course of a year a number of people equal to seventy-three times the total population of Creston, neither of the managers will admit that the maximum has been reached and both are fighting just as hard to increase their patronage as they were eight months ago when each took charge of run-down houses at approximately the same time.

Eight months ago, Creston boasted two houses that were making only a fair profit. With the war tax, the admission to each was 11 cents to children, and 17 cents for adults, and neither ever knew what it was to have standees present or a surplus at the end of the week.

Neither theatre was run as a first class house, and then, the Adams Amusement Company asked Miss Katherine Schliep to go to Creston and make a first class house out of the Willard.

About the same time E. Metzger, who had had considerable experience as an exhibitor in Des Moines, with some associates decided that Creston ought to support at least one first class theatre and control was obtained of the Strand, the other house.

Both Miss Schliep and Mr. Metzger arrived in Creston with the idea of building up a house without opposition, and found that they were up against the toughest opposition they ever encountered in their lives. Both theatres were immediately closed and renovated. The alterations in the Willard were not as extensive as those in the Strand, where leather upholstered seats took the place of wooden chairs in addition to the installation of a $4,000 pipe organ. The seating capacity of the Willard was enlarged to enable Miss Schliep to make use of lobby displays, and in fact, both theatres were brought to an up-to-date standard.

On re-opening, Miss Schliep asked only the former scale of prices, 11 cents and 17 cents. She arranged a tasty lobby display and used big newspaper space. She sent cards to everybody in the city announcing the opening. After running a few weeks she announced a raise in price for adults to 22 cents with the explanation that the expense of bringing the kind of pictures she wanted Creston audiences to see was greater than the old price made profitable. At the same time it was rumored that the Strand would charge 11 cents and 22 cents when it was opened; but Mr. Metzger opened the competition war in earnest when he re-opened the Strand with a 17-cent top.

That was eight months ago and since then the two exhibitors have been fighting tooth and nail for the patronage of the city. Neither claims it now, although both houses are numbered among the best paying in the state of Iowa and both are charging 17 cents and 33 cents. The war is still on but the price feature of it ended as soon as Mr. Metzger had been opened a few weeks. He used the lower price merely as an introductory bargain.

The methods they employed in fighting for patronage is the thing which has led to the claim that Creston is the best exhibitor-exploited city in the United States.

Both the managers believe in exploitation and lots of it, and both employ novelty exploitation to the extent that the people of Creston are constantly on the alert to identify some new sensation as connected with one or the other of the houses.

It would be hard to enumerate all the stunts each of the theatres has employed during the time the two present managers have been in charge. Some of the high spots, however, are worthy of mention as to what can be done by exhibitors in smaller towns.

For lobby displays, the Willard probably touched its high spot when Miss Schliep had a pen erected in the lobby for the housing of some woolly lambs and a sheep dog, with a cut-out of Anita Stewart in the blackground, for the exploiting of that star in "The Fighting Shepherdess."

On the other hand, "What Women Love" inspired Mr. Metzger to invite mothers with infant babies to attend the showing so that the babies in carriages in the lobby in charge of a nurse gave atmosphere to the sign that hung on the front of each carriage:

"One thing that women love more than their lives. See some of the other things they love and demand inside."

Mr. Metzger used a little colored boy as a sandwich-board bearer to put over "The Twilight Baby," with the wording on the board, "I am not a Twilight Baby because I was born one hour after midnight," etc. An eight-year-old girl and a ten-year-old boy carrying an umbrella on which was the wording, "We are ardently in love, and long to be rich. See some of the things we have to pass through in 'The Greatest Question,' at the Strand" put that attraction over in great style. A woman richly dressed, driven around the city in an open Victoria, with a banner on each side, "The Love Expert. Let Me Teach You How at the Strand," and a man wearing the accepted costume of a devil distributing cards bearing the wording, "I am 'In Search of a Sinner,'" is the exploitation he gave to these two Constance Talmadge productions.

Miss Schliep resurrected the old Indian cry, used when Creston was a fortified settlement, of "Polly's Coming," for use by a man garbed as a Westerner dashing wildly through the city preceding the arrival of two prairie schooners bearing the announcements of the showing of "Polly of the Storm Country." An offer of free tickets to "Back to God's Country" to every Creston boy who would bring a dog to the theatre, was the basis of one of the most unusual parades that ever took place in the city when the youngsters led their pets through the streets.

The live wire exploitation which both of them indulge in is daily proving that there is no such thing as a maximum percentage of population that exhibitors can pull into their theatres.

Simple But Effective Vocal Number at Rivoli

HUGO REISENFELD'S vocal number at the Rivoli this week is very simply but effectively staged. Betty Anderson, assisted by the Rivoli chorus singing from off the stage, renders "Flow Gently Sweet Afton." The stage setting is a very small interior backing an opening left in velvet draperies ten feet square. The house and stage are both dark with the set lighted back of the curtains by floods. The number opens with the chorus singing from back stage. After the first verse Miss Anderson renders the next verse as a solo with the ensemble coming in on the chorus.

Lyric's Exploitation Wins

Wells Richmond Theatre Stages Great Campaign for Showing of "Madame X"

A THOROUGHGOING exploitation campaign was put over for the showing of "Madame X" at the Lyric theatre, Richmond, Va., by Harry Bernstein, general manager of the Wells theatres in Richmond; S. B. Tucker, manager of the Lyric, and W. R. Ferguson, Goldwyn headquarters traveling exploitation representative. New ideas were evolved for the engagement and old, effective ones utilized.

The billboard advertising was the greatest ever used in Richmond in connection with any picture—fifty 24-sheet stands with innumerable smaller posters, lithos, cards, etc.

Many novelties were distributed, including several thousand paper handkerchiefs on the outer fold of which was printed in red ink, "To be used only by weepers at the Lyric theatre, week commencing Monday, Nov. 1, 1920." On the other outside fold was printed, "See the greatest mother love story ever written, 'Madame X', a Goldwyn picture." These were distributed on Hallowe'en by a young lady dressed as Madame X in millinery and department stores, in restaurants and at dances and other places where women congregated. The young woman had a large red letter X two feet high pinned on the front of her costume and attracted a great deal of attention.

The lobby of the Lyric theatre was most effectively decorated. A ten-foot cut-out of the blindfolded figure of Justice holding a pair of real scales was placed at the entrance into the auditorium, where every one who entered the lobby or looked in while passing could not fail to see it. Justice hovered over a smaller cut-out, from a three-sheet litho, of the principal figures in the trial scenes which, in turn, was flanked by a large painting of Pauline Frederick and by a painting of another view of the trial scene. The litho cut-out was placed two feet in front of the figure of Justice with colored strip lights between to liven up the setting at night. The effect of this decorating was extraordinary in the sustained attention it received from persons entering or passing the lobby.

The barricade in front of the new Colonial theatre in course of construction, on which paper for the different picture attractions in Richmond was posted, was also utilized for "Madame X" exploitation. Seven letter cards reading M-A-D-A-M-E X were placed on the uprights of the barricade. The sign could be read for a distance of a block or more and the location is one of the most central in the city.

In addition to all of this an unusually fine newspaper campaign was carried through by Zacha Woodall, publicity representative of the Wells theatres.

During the presentation of the picture, while the court room scene was on the screen, an invisible soloist sang the ever-popular, "Silver Threads Among the Gold." It came as a surprise to the audiences and proved a very agreeable one, adding a unique and appropriate touch.

Albany Strand Specializing in Presentation

A dozen or more drops used at the Strand in New York will be brought to Albany and utilized in changing the stage settings at the new Mark Strand theatre. There will be a change each week. When the theatre opened the background consisted of a view of the Bay of Naples, with Vesuvius in the distance. Last week the scene was changed to a view of Lake Como, and next week a glimpse of Holland will be shown. It is the intention of the management to also use prologues from time to time. Scenics will also have a prominent place on the program, "The Song of the Paddle," "Wanderlust" and others of a like character having been booked for early presentation. It has been found impossible to secure local soloists with the result that New York vocalists will be used entirely. Katherine Stang, a New York violinist, will have a place on next week's program, while Mary Mitchell of New York will be featured in the vocal end of the program during the showing of "Kismet."

Berg Presenting Novel Prologue with "So Long Letty"

"So Long Letty" began a two weeks' engagement at the Strand theatre, San Francisco, Sunday.

A seven-person prologue, with singing and dancing and a beach scene, shadowgraph, showing five girls undressing, has been personally produced and staged by Ellis G. Berg, resident manager of the theatre. The prologue is entitled, "On a Beautiful Beach." Four song numbers and one dance number are used. Berg has had many years' experience on the stage and as manager and has been very successful lately in increasing the patronage of the Strand. He has a wide reputation as successful showman.

Youngsters Figure in Maddox's Exploitation Campaign

The youngsters of Columbus, Ohio, played an important part in the exploitation campaign which J. A. Maddox, manager of the Southern theatre, Columbus, O., put over in the interests of "The Soul of Youth," a recent attraction at the Southern.

Saturday morning prior to the opening date, Mr. Maddox announced a showing of the picture for 1,000 school children, two being selected from every school room in the city. The idea was that these boys would go back and tell their mates about the picture. According to the reports they did that very thing.

The following day Mr. Maddox was host to 1,000 newsies at a second showing. Right here a novel idea came to Mr. Maddox. A few weeks previous the papers printed acconuts of a Columbus boy, Arthur Sierhoff, who ran away from home and lived in a piano box for eleven weeks. The lad earned his living by acting as caddy for golfers at a local club. The newspapers had played this up and public interest was aroused. Seeing the tie-up between this boy and the hero of "The Soul of Youth," Mr. Maddox engaged him to take tickets at his theatre during the picture's run.

Tickets issued to the newsboys read: "Come and see the 'newsie' who lived in a piano box become a real hero. It's a swell picture." The newsboys came. Wednesday the picture was shown to the Juvenile Court, with Judge Bostwick present. On Tuesday the boys' committee of the Columbus Rotary Club occupied boxes. Interest in the production was thoroughly aroused by comments in the newspapers.

It was increased by the announcement that the boy who lived in a piano box would take tickets at the door. And the grown-ups, attracted by the attention given to the youth as well as by the word of mouth exploiting furnished by their sons, came in a body.

Concerning Hyman's Vocal Number at Brooklyn Strand

The song portrait had its introduction at the Brooklyn Strand theatre recently in connection with the showing of "Dinty," was received with surprise and marked another Edward L. Hyman origination in the way of a novelty.

Sullivan's "The Lost Chord" served as a foundation. Wilfred Glenn sang the number, seated at an organ with a wonderfully tinted and high arched church window as a background. With a flood of pale lights streaming through the colored panes Mr. Glem robed in cassock was surrounded with a dreamy soft atmosphere chiming in with the words of the song. As he sang his fingers glided over the keys. In such sharp relief were the lines of the effect that one thought at once of a superbly toned portrait.

Desormeaux Exploitation Campaign for "Humoresque"

No picture ever had a more complete exploitation campaign than did "Humoresque" when it played a week at the Fuller Opera House in Madison, Wis. A. P. Desormeaux, manager of the Strand theatre, desiring to give "Humoresque" a de luxe presentation at advanced prices, engaged the Fuller Opera House, instead of running it in the Strand, which has an established price and program policy.

Two weeks ahead of the engagement he launched his ambitious plans. He sent out dignified announcements to a special showing, inviting leading women, the mayor, the governor of Wisconsin, state officials and others. Nearly 200 persons were at the private showing. Mr. Desormeaux figured that by holding the showing two weeks in advance, it would give better opportunity for the word of mouth advertising to circulate. He was correct. He received a score of laudatory letters from women whose names meant much in Madison.

With this good start, he took advantage of all other exploitation possibilities of "Humoresque," arranging window displays, special newspaper stories, etc.

However, the stunt that attracted most attention was this: With the cooperation of Oscar A. Doob of the Chicago Exploitation Department of Famous Players-Lasky, Mr. Desormeaux arranged to have returned to him promptly his rental check for $1,500. He also arranged to get duplicate receipts and contract from Famous Players. He had the check reproduced for newspaper cuts. He mounted the contract, the receipt and the canceled check on cardboard and framed the display for his lobby, announcing that "Humoresque" was the highest priced picture that ever played Madison." His newspaper advertising also carried a reproduction of the check. The price of $1,500 probably amazed the populace of Madison and they placed a higher value on the picture than they otherwise would have done. The stunt caused a lot of gossip, for the public likes to feel it is getting on the "inside" of the show business by learning the price paid, etc. In this case, Mr. Desormeaux had no hesitancy in proclaiming the rental figure.

And in the face of discouraging weather, "Humoresque" came through with tremendous business,

Stage setting and characters who appeared in a prologue number staged by the Imperial theatre, San Francisco, for the showing of "Behold My Wife"

Imperial, 'Frisco, Presents Excellent Prologue

Keen understanding of the principles of stagecraft was evidenced by Leon Levy, house manager of the Imperial theatre of San Francisco, which is under the associate direction of Messrs. Roth and Partington, when the theatre staged its prologue for "Behold My Wife."

The tableau evidenced the talent for which the house manager is known on the Pacific coast. It was pretentious, artistic and in thorough keeping with the theme of the feature picture.

The tableau opened on a darkened stage which was lightened gradually to reveal a realistic and bizarre snowstorm effect, such as one would expect in the Canadian northwest which furnishes the locale for the opening scenes of "Behold My Wife." After the storm ceased and the sky cleared the full effect of the stage setting became apparent. The tall timbers shown in the photograph and their branches are heavily laden with snow as a result of the storm. At the back of this was a realistic moon effect, and around a dimly lighted fire several costumed Redskins squatted around a typical Indian wigwam.

All of the characters in the sketch were singers of the first order. The featured singer was Miss Thelma Thelmar, well known in San Francisco for concert and local stage work. Several solos were rendered, the prologue terminating with Miss Thelmar's solo, "Pale Moon," which furnished a fitting climax. As soon as the entire company had completed the closing chorus, the stage darkened amid generous applause and the projection machine flickered the first rays of the feature film.

Seattle Exploitation for "Earthbound"

"Earthbound" received a newspaper flash exploitation in Seattle that hit nearly every person in the city in the eye. It was due to the ingenuity of J. W. Rankin, Goldwyn exploitation representative at the Seattle exchange, and his standing with the newspaper fraternity. Mr. Rankin made use of the ghost story contest which was first used for "Earthbound" in Los Angeles, but he put it across with a novel twist.

One hundred dollars was offered in prizes for the best ghost stories sent to the editor of the Star, illustrating or in any manner bearing upon the theme of the photoplay. As a sample of the sort of story which the newspaper wanted, an outline of the plot of "Earthbound" was told in 250 words and printed in a box on the first page of the Star for Saturday, November 6. This was labeled, "The Original Story," and above it were the amounts to be paid in prizes. Still above that were the words, "Ghost" Stories, printed in white letters against a black background, while topping the whole announcement occurred the words, "One Hundred Dollars," in 18-point capital letters, occupying two lines, also in white against a black background. And then the whole space of the announcement, two columns wide by ten inches deep, was covered with a splash of red ink as was the "ribbon" across the top of the page and the head of the leading story.

After the newspaper was off the presses, Mr. Rankin bought up a few thousand copies and had the lower half of the page red-lined with announcements of the picture.

"Three for Jack" Vocal Offering at Capitol

THE vocal number on the Capitol bill for the current week is a male ensemble offering, "Three for Jack." Bertram Peacock sings the verses with the ensemble assisting in the chorus.

The stage setting used is a black velvet drop except for a strip in center through which a water scene is visible. The singers are attired in sailor costumes.

Small Town Theatre Does Good Exploitation

That even the small motion picture theatre in the small town can do effective exploitation was proved by W. H. Ostenburg, Jr., manager of the Royal theatre, Gering, Neb., for the booking of "The Revenge of Tarzan." The picture did a tremendous business, the credit for which Mr. Ostenburg gave to the lobby display, the engagement not being long enough for word-of-mouth advertising to aid the business. Goldwyn's Denver exploitation representative aided Mr. Ostenburg in working out the scheme for lobby decorating. The cost was almost nothing for the exhibitor was able to borrow the plants used and the grasses and foliage were gathered from the woods and the figures cut out of the "Tarzan" posters.

The most conspicuous thing about the display was a "Tarzan" 24-sheet, mounted on frames and hung on the front of the theatre, over the lobby entrance, from the roof. The foliage in the upper part of the theatre entrance reached to the bottom of the 24-sheet. On the floor were palms, ferns, grasses and vines which gave very much the appearance of a bit of African jungle. A large cut-out figure of Tarzan, resting his foot in triumph on the body of the lion he had slain in barehanded conflict, with a cut-out figure of a monkey hanging from the branches, were the outstanding features of the lobby display. Two frames of colored stills and paintings of the thrilling struggle between Tarzan and the lion occupied the center of the entrance.

The display was simple but tremendously effective. The idea is one that any exhibitor, even in the smallest of picture theatres, can execute with little cost, adding greatly to the drawing power of the picture. Where the engagement is for but one or two days such a display is essential as the picture gets none of the word-of-mouth advertising.

Here is the "Daddy Long Legs" described in the accompanying story concerning M. J. Huss and the Lyric theatre of Monticello, Minn.

Huss Gives His Ideas of Exploitation

M. J. Huss, manager of the Lyric theatre, Monticello, Minn., is a firm believer in the fact that standardization of motion pictures, and motion picture values, will become a reality as soon as a sufficient number of big, merit laden productions become the vogue.

Moreover, Mr. Huss relies not only on his pet theories to evidence his strong contention; but in his demonstration he has allowed exploitation to play a definite part in helping him go on record as to the personal confidence he has in his own ideas.

Perhaps nothing better illustrates Mr. Huss' idea than the fact that recently, in the face of all sorts of offers on the part of exchanges and film salesmen, Mr. Huss picked a well-known and already successful photoplay and exploited it as though it were as new as a 1921 Lincoln penny.

This feature was "Daddy Long Legs." "Daddy Long Legs" wasn't exactly a brand new article to that section of Minnesota; but it was a tried and proven article. For, as Mr. Huss says:

"A good picture should live for ever—just like a good stage play. Shakespeare's 'Julius Caesar' doesn't play for less money the second time it comes to town; nor does any well established entertainment success. Nor should a fine motion picture."

Mr. Huss' exploitation consisted of a stunt which comprised a man on stilts, carrying a leather hand bag upon which was the word matter: "'Daddy Long Legs' at the Lyric Theatre, today."

Above is shown what can be accomplished at small expense in the way of a lobby display. This is the display which the Royal theatre of Gering, Neb., arranged for its showing of "The Revenge of Tarzan"

Above is shown the stage setting and the cast of characters which took part in the prologue originated by Jos. Plunkett, manager of the Strand theatre, New York, as described in a recent issue of the NEWS. Mr. Plunkett's prologue is being used by all the Mark Strand theatres for the engagement of "Kismet"

Boosts Local Mardi Gras

Johnson Ties Up With Layfayette Merchants Instead of Combating Their Festival Plans

OUT-DOOR affairs, especially those of the carnival type, are not usually regarded by exhibitors as being at all conducive to the increase of attendance in motion pictures. Too many people are kept out of doors.

Herbert H. Johnson, of Lafayette, Ind., is an exhibitor, however, who regards such an event as one bound to do an exhibitor good if he will accept it in the proper spirit.

Mr. Johnson is the manager of the Luna theatre of Lafayette. The merchants of his city cooperated in the organization of a miniature Mardi Gras for the municipal celebration of Hallowe'en. The idea had no more enthusiastic supporter than Mr. Johnson, who promised the organizer that he would have a surprise to add to the merriment of the evening.

Several blocks of pavement were roped off for the use of the celebrants, who appeared in every sort of costume and, of course, all of them were masked. When the merriment was at its height, the shrill notes of a piccolo were heard from the upper end of the street. A masked figure, garbed in the costume of the Pied Piper of Hamlin, came down the street, dancing gayly to the notes of his own instrument and beckoning to the merrymakers to follow him.

Hundreds of the carnival crowd fell in in back of the piper. He led them through the roped-off streets and then just at the end stopped in front of the Luna theatre. Several girls wearing fantastic costumes went through the crowd distributing ice cream cones and small tin horns with "ye compliments of Lord Johnson, baron of ye pictures of motion."

A great many of those who had taken part in the parade made their way into the theatre, but the exploitation of the current attraction, "The Notorious Miss Lisle," was not the object of the parade. On each side of the tin horns that had been distributed was the announcement that "Harriet and the Piper" would be the Luna's feature picture the following week.

The horns were taken home as souvenirs of the occasion and resulted in progressive advertising of the feature as the story of the piper's parade was repeated to those who had not witnessed it.

Irish Question Aids Exploitation Scheme

"Read the local newspapers — keep abreast of the times—and make your exploitation tie-up with current interest and the news."

That's the advice of R. P. Greer, of the Victory theatre, Sylacauga, Ala. As an example of the way Mr. Greer practices what he preaches, his exploitation on a recent feature, "The Lord Loves the Irish."

The local papers had been filled with the Irish trouble. The feature was booked to play the Victory just one week to a day after the death of Terence MacSwiney—although, of course, this was a mere coincidence. But it, too, had its little part to play in the finished scheme.

Five days before the picture was to play and before any prominence whatever had been given to the name of the picture, or any publicity attached to it whatever, postcards were addressed, in brilliant green ink, to every name on Mr. Greer's up-to-the-minute mailing list. On these cards, also in green ink, was written just the sentence, "Was it right that Terence MacSwiney should have been starved?" There was no signature, and the cards created a sensation in the little Alabama town.

The cards were mailed on Friday. On Sunday, agitation and excitement in the little town having reached a high pitch, two or three ministers either added remarks about the mysterious card to their regular sermons, or "scrapped" sermons entirely to talk about the Irish situation, and, incidentally, the card.

On Monday another card was mailed—written in green ink, as before, stamped with a green (one-cent) stamp, and reading: "The Lord Loves the Irish." When this had had time to "soak in," Tuesday's card arrived, with the message, "The Lord Loves the Irish," at the Victory theatre, tomorrow and Thursday. Don't miss it."

Keegan Runs Complete Serial in One Evening

Troy Exhibitor Pulls Novel Stunt With Pathe's Serial "Bound and Gagged"

WHAT do you think of running the entire twenty-one reels of a ten-episode serial in a single evening?

Daniel Keegan, of Watervliet, owner of a 400-seat residential theatre in Troy, first asked himself the question and then proceeded to answer it by booking and running "Bound and Gagged" at a matinee which started at 4 o'clock, and an evening show which got under way at 7:30 o'clock, with admission prices at 20 and 25 cents.

The scheme proved so successful that Mr. Keegan is now planning to have another "serial evening" in the near future.

In fact, Mr. Keegan, who has given much time, thought and money to solving the present-day problems which confront the owner of the small residential houses, is more firmly convinced than ever that the solution lies to a great extent in the serial.

Finding that his serials on three nights a week were attracting audiences that filled his house, Mr. Keegan decided that instead of keeping his patrons on the anxious seat from week to week, leaving them each serial night wondering what was coming next, that he would run the entire ten episodes and take a chance at results.

Starting his matinee at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, in order to attract the school children, many of whom had religiously followed every episode of every serial, Mr. Keegan went to work and advertised his scheme in the local papers. As a result some of the boys and girls, accompanied by their parents or guardians, appeared with their lunches in order that they could enjoy the picture and still have their supper.

Mr. Keegan also employs another novel little stunt in making every one of his 400 seats count in the box-office returns. Finding that his theatre was attracting a great many chcildren of the neighborhood, particularly on the nights when serials were shown, and also noticing that it was almost impossible for him to fill the first ten rows with adults, he substituted long seats without arms for these chairs, and then proceeded to fill them with the children, who had no objections to sitting close to the screen. In fact, they rather liked it.

Over this section of the house, Mr. Keegan has placed a man whose duty it is to see that the children are orderly and attentive, and woe be to the boy or girl who starts any "rough house" proceedings. The children know that any cutting up on their part will result in their expulsion and as a rule they are a well behaved lot.

The children are mainly from the neighborhood and know one another. Arriving at the theatre with their parents, they much prefer sitting in front with their playmates and enjoying the thrills before them. This little scheme serves to fill the front rows and, together with the serials, goes a long ways in solving the financial problems which the house necessarily encounters.

In order to ascertain whether or not this or that type of pictures appeals to his patrons, Mr. Keegan may be found standing at the door each night, and knowing nearly every one as he does, he inquires if the picture has been satisfactory, and if not, the reason. In that way Mr. Keegan can come pretty close to booking pictures that assure him a full house night after night, for he changes daily, and a full house, barring weather conditions, means a steady bank deposit.

On Sunday nights, Mr. Keegan runs a somewhat better picture, if possible, than during the week. For this, admission is 17 cents. During the remainder of the week, the price is 11 cents, excepting the single night when he staged the twenty-one reels at 20 and 25 cents.

"I do not know whether anyone else ever tried running twenty-one reels making up a complete serial in a single evening," said Mr. Keegan in discussing the proposition with the NEWS correspondent. "I concluded that I would try it out and see what happened, and instead of holding the suspense from week to week, to give them an entire evening of thrills at slightly advanced prices. The stunt was so successful that I am going to try it out again, and if possible, I would like to make it a monthly feature. There has been a lot of talk about serials, but I really think that they are proving the saviours of more than one residential house. At 11 cents, I am unable to book any first run features, of course, but I make a study of what my people want, I give them good projection, my house is warm in the winter, and I look after the youngsters in a way that relieves the parents and also fills the first ten rows, and every seat in those ten rows is worth a dime to me, and a dime in a 400-seat house must be considered.

"There is one thing, though, that I think is important," said Mr. Keegan, in conclusion, "and that is that the film exchanges do not consider the small house as they should. For instance, I sometimes receive films without leaders, titles chopped off or blurred and in other respects inferior, things that cannot help but injure your patronage. The small house, if it is to be successful, must pay just as much attention to the details as the larger ones, and people are not going to pay their money, even if it is but a dime, and return night after night, if such film is foisted on them. The little residential house is still, and I trust always will be, an important factor in motion picture circles, and the sooner some film companies recognize the fact as having a bearing on every phase of the industry almost, the better off they will be."

Strand Has Fine Stage Setting

A STAGE setting is unveiled at the New York Strand this week during the rendition of the overture number, "Les Preludes," which fits in exceptionally well with the theme of the composition.

The setting is first shown during the storm passages of the number and the spectator sees but dimly a landscape with a storm raging at night. Lightning flashes light up the scene momentarily. Realism is added to the lightning by the fact that the jagged forks of lightning bolts are perfectly reproduced.

Gradually as the music grows lighter the floods on the setting are changed to sunrise hues and the topography of the scene is shown. Small hills and valleys are seen in perspective with a lake and larger mounds in the distance. With the lights full up in pink and scarlet a shepherd with his herd, a number of live sheep, cross the stage.

"Homespun Folks" Exploitation Scores at Newark

"Homespun Folks" bids fair to be another "Down on the Farm" for exploitation goes. Here is another account of how this picture was put over, a tale direct from the pen of Frank L. Smith, managing director of the Rialto theatre, Newark, N. J., where "Homespun Folks" has just completed a successful engagement:

"We staged a prologue to the feature which went over very big. As we are handicapped for stage space, the best we could do was to build a miniature stage, and the set represented the living room of a farm house with appropriate furnishings. The two characters represented a typical rural couple. As a duet the soloists offered 'Silver Threads Among the Gold.' We used great care in the selection of the music throughout the action of the picture and brought out every good point. As an overture number, the orchestra used 'Home Sweet Home, the World Over,' with various art titles and captions explaining how the number would be played by orchestras in the various countries."

Osteen's Treasure Hunt Idea

"Go and Get It" Exploitation That "Got" Most of Anderson's Fans

THE latest story concerning good exploitation for "Go and Get It" comes from Anderson, S. C., where even "The Birth of a Nation" played only two days and "Go and Get It" was booked for three days. It was the three-day run which made Manager Osteen of the Strand theatre decide that all exploitation efforts were to be eclipsed for "Go and Get It."

First of all, he arranged a private screening for the president and faculty of Anderson College for Girls, and so enthusiastic were they that they promptly agreed to cooperate with him in every way possible. He suggested that the students of the college sell tickets for the picture, 25 per cent of the proceeds of the sale by this association to be their own for any use the body chose to make of it. The president agreed, and five hundred tickets were ordered for them on Wednesday preceding the showing of the picture.

Another and most important part of the exploitation was a treasure hunt, staged by Mr. Osteen and about two hundred small boys in Anderson. On Friday and Saturday announcements appeared in all the papers reading:

"Hidden Treasure in Anderson.

"Go and Get It.

"Boys desiring to compete in this search will call at the office of the Strand theatre on Monday at 2 P. M. for their Go and Get It Tags.

"Lots of fun and a considerable amount of money for the lucky boy."

And at 2 P. M. on Monday the street around the Strand was literally alive with boys. About two hundred tags were distributed, and the boys were told that a ten-dollar prize had been left with one of the merchants in town. No one save Mr. Osteen and the merchant in question knew of the identity of the man holding the prize—and there was considerable excitement when the boys got started. Downtown merchants were swamped with boys and inquiries, and the few people so ill-informed as not to know what was going on were astounded and puzzled by the energy and lung-power of the boys. Anderson's business district is built around a city square, and for more than an hour the sound of boyish voices yelling, "Mr. Osteen told me to go and get it—have you got it?" filled the air.

Del Monte Theatre Entertains College Boys

When the ordinary folk of St. Louis began pouring into the Del Monte theatre last Tuesday they were greeted by just such sounds emanating from the stage of the largest one-floor motion picture house in America:

Rip 'em up! Tear 'em up!
Give 'em hell! Pikers!
Rip 'em up! Tear 'em up!
Ole Washington!

And

White and Blue!
White and Blue!
S—T—L—U.

Yes, it was 2,000 university students who were permitted the use of the theatre during the second performance for a Pep meeting. In St. Louis there are two leading universities; namely, Washington and St. Louis. Every Thanksgiving Day the annual classic football clash between these two schools arouses the interest of all the city. Because of the keen interest connected with the contest, Manager Schwartz of the Del Monte conceived the idea of tieing up a popular annual event with his theatre.

Accordingly, he offered the use of his auditorium to the two schools and gave them each 500 free tickets. The Del Monte seats 4,000, but this seating capacity is seldom filled during the second performance of the evening.

Fowler Stages Prologue for "45 Minutes"

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood theatre, West Utica at Elmwood avenue, put on a stage setting for "45 Minutes from Broadway," similar to that shown at the Strand theatre, New York, last summer. Bruce built the Pullman platform himself and borrowed part of the Pullman scenes in the Shriner films shot by Elmer C. Wagner on the trip to Portland. As the scene was unveiled a local soloist sang "So Long Mary," the hit of the stage play.

Fisher Stages Treasure Hunt

How a St. Mary's, Pa., Exhibitor Put Over "Go and Get It"

ANY exhibitor who is in such a small town that he thinks exploitation is merely wasted money because it is calling attention of his patrons to things they already know, may learn something from the first motion picture exploitation "stunt" ever put over in St. Marys, Pa. St. Marys has less than 8,000 inhabitants and the town is so arranged that it is doubtful if there is anyone therein who would not know what was playing at the Temple theatre, if Manager J. C. Fisher only used pictures in his lobby for advertising.

Mr. Fisher, however, appreciated that exploitation is not so much for the purpose of letting people know what your theater is showing as it is for getting the public worked up into a humor where they really want to see it.

He had never tried exploitation, although he had attempted many times, until he booked "Go and Get It." The treasure-hunt angle appealed to him and he decided to try it out.

Accordingly, the one daily paper in St. Mary's, carried an advertisement stating that some time before seven o'clock on the opening day of "Go and Get It," at the Temple theatre, two $2.50 gold pieces would be hidden near the "Diamond," a public square in the centre of the city, and that the only thing necessary for the possession of one of the gold pieces would be to "Go and Get It."

One of the gold pieces was put in an empty match box and dropped in the gutter, the second was put about ten feet from the walk on the base of a railroad crossing signal devise. Early in the morning many persons started searching the grounds, but the real hunt didn't begin until the schools were out and the kiddies joined in. By late afternoon the stunt of attempting to "Go and Get It" was a municipal pastime, and the showing at the Temple drew big because the production had attracted the attention. Neither of the gold pieces had been found when darkness fell.

Second-day showings are not popular in St. Marys. Mr. Fisher never expects to clean up on a two-days' showing, but so books pictures in order to avoid the trouble of getting daily shipments, since the lower rental usually balances whatever more money might be brought into the box office by a daily change. The treasure-hunt changed this, however. The piece in the match-box was found before school opened on the second day, and this assurance that the hunt really wasn't a fake brought renewed interest.

The second gold piece was found just in time to be included in the story in the afternoon's paper and for the first time in the history of St. Marys a second day pulled as well as a first.

Mr. Fisher has "sold" himself on exploitation and because "Go and Get It" proved that there is sufficient patronage in St. Marys to afford two days of crowded houses, he declares that it will be either his fault or the fault of the pictures he books, if he doesn't do twice the business from now on that he has done in the past.

Marrow Secures Results in Navy Tie-Up

Uncle Sam was looking for marine recruits when Manager Floyd D. Marrow of the Nelson theatre, Fairmont, W. Va., found his playing dates for "The Skywayman" due, and was able to stage a hook-up with the recruiting officers, whereby Fairmont was flooded with one-sheet posters announcing the picture at the Nelson and telling Fairmont young men to "join the marines and learn to fly themselves."

The recruiting officers also obtained a complete aeroplane machine gun which, when assembled, was placed in front of the theatre during the showing, and for two days prior to the opening. The co-advertising, was productive of excellent business for the picture during the three days' run.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Tom Coates, of the Chicago Herald and Examiner, attended the last luncheon of the Motion Picture Press Club, which was held at the Dejonghe Hotel, for the purpose of thanking the publicity and exploitation men who are members of the club for their aid in putting over the motion picture star guessing contest, which is proving a tremendous success, and securing the co-operation of three hundred Chicago theatres in the contest. The contest is giving valuable advertising to the moving picture industry as well as proving a circulation builder for the Herald-Examiner.

Arrangements have been completed for the showing of D. W. Griffith's "'Way Down East," at the Wood theatre next month when the legitimate will give way to the movies for an indefinite run of this big feature.

Robert Anderson, whose work as a comedian and in "Once to Every Woman," where he plays opposite Dorothy Philips, is well known to all moving picture men, was a Chicago visitor this week. While here his manager, Harry Rice, arranged for him to make a personal appearance at ten of Ascher Bros.' houses where "Once to Every Woman" was being screened, and Mr. Anderson met with a cordial reception at the various houses.

Harry Weiss is starting on a week's trip through Central Illinois to line up exhibitors on the new productions to be released through Superior Screen Service by the Sherman Pictures Corporation and the National Exchanges, Incorporated. Now that Fred Aiken is taking an active part in the management of Superior, Harry will be able to put in more time making key centers than he has been able to do heretofore, when tied down by the office work in Chicago. Mr. Weiss and a party of friends are planning to spend Christmas week duck shooting on the Wabash River near Logansport, Ind.

Among out-of-town exhibitors visiting Chicago exchanges last week were: C. C. Hoeffer, Victory theatre, Peotone, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Mollineaux, Orpheum theatre, Bradley, Ill.; Mrs. D. S. Smith, Opera House, Watseka, Ill., and Mrs. Smith, of Hoopeston, Ill.; M. Rubens, Joliet.

J. E. Bingemer has opened his new thousand-seat theatre at Niles, Mich., which was recently completed at a cost of $100,000, and has been named the Riviera. The opening program included a Vitagraph special, "Trumpet Island," and a Harold Lloyd Comedy.

H. A. R. Dutton, of the Exhibitors' Supply Company, is adding new members to the personnel of his office staff to take care of the rapidly-developing business. The latest addition to the Exhibitors' Supply Company's force is George De Kruif, who will have charge of advertising and sales promotion. Mr. De Kruif is known around Chicago as one of the ablest exploitation, advertising and publicity men connected with the industry, and will bring a valuable fund of experience and marked ability to the new position.

Arthur Clippinger, formerly salesman of Robertson-Cole, is now associated with Superior Screen Service, and will cover the north side of the city as salesman. W. J. Mayer, formerly of First National, is another new member of the Superior Screen Service staff, having taken a position as booker.

It is reported that negotiations for the purchase of the Howard theatre, Howard Avenue and Sheridan Road, have practically been closed by Lester Retchem, formerly of the Paulina theatre, and that he will take over the property about January 1.

Maurice Salkin and Maurice Kline have formed a partnership, and will operate under the name of the Blackstone Film Corporation. The new concern has opened offices at 21 East Seventh Street, which is in the heart of Chicago's new film district.

John Mednikow, while out with his family Thanksgiving Day, stepped on the gas and collided with a fast moving trolley car. When the smoke cleared away the only one not hurt by the collision was John. The members of his family all received minor injuries, but were able to proceed on their way after visiting the drug store.

Celebrated Players Film Corporation held a special trade showing of "Vanishing Trails," the Col. Selig serial, at the Vitagraph projection room, a large audience of exhibitors being present. The theme is a Western melodrama, and the elaboration of treatment and interesting plot places it in the class as the best picture of its kind.

It is reported that R. Lange, owner of the Dreamland Theatre, Rockford, Illinois, has purchased the Colonial of the same city and will take over active management immediately.

Manager Graumon of Metro, reports that contracts are coming in rapidly from the smaller towns, the key cities throughout the territory having been booked up sometime ago. He states that the success of Metro's present sales policy has been demonstrated everywhere and as an example points to Chicago where one hundred and fifty-eight theatres have booked the 1920-21 Metro service 100 per cent, including the special and Nazimova features. Kettering, general representative of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, sends word from St. Augustine, Florida, where he went to recuperate, following two dangerous operations, that he is fully recovering and is putting on a fine coat of tan. It will be good news to his hundreds of friends to know that he will be back at his office and will resume his activities at the end of the month.

Music and The Picture

BY CHARLES D. ISAACSON

THEN when you believe that music is a language, and that it can be applied to the film to interpret, illuminate and give speech to the silent screen, the biggest obstacle has been hurdled.

For when you believe that, you will be able to use your own common sense as to whether the right effects are being used. You will be able to hear for yourself (without being able to play a note yourself) whether the spirit of the orchestral performance is in harmony with the film. Even if your orchestra consists of one piano, you will know by hearing and seeing if things are going right. You will know if your musician is using a comedy piece of music with a tragic episode. You will be able to say: "Jim, for goodness' sake (or whatever other phrase you use), Jim, for goodness' sake, cut out that comedy stuff; it's ruining the whole scene."

But mainly you won't need to worry about the musical scoring of the pictures, because you will be able to pick your right man. There's the next important step—get the right man—the man with the right viewpoint—not a highbrow who looks down on stunts and effects where they are necessary—and not a boob who can't rise above the commonplace when it is going to make a picture to do so. The right man, whether he's his only musician, or whether he heads on orchestra of eighty, has this motion picture musical viewpoint. The sooner the industry realizes that the best symphonic conductor might fall in the picture theatre, the sooner we'll move faster all around. The sooner the industry realizes that a vaudeville conductor generally can't make good (because he's down, down, down, and doesn't know how to climb on necessity) the more trouble will be avoided.

With the right man at your right hand, the musical division is on the road to success. Then comes the matter of musical equipment. What is to be your permanent installation? You need permanent musical installations in most cases, just the same as you need your screen, your projection machine, etc.

Choosing a musical installation is a difficult matter, unless you know what you're going to do with it. If you find you can't afford to pay or cannot get good musicians, then you are up against the necessity of using mechanical machines, with rolls that go by electricity or foot power. But if you can hire a good player, give him the best instrument you can afford—for human renditions are still the best after all. It is not like having a player piano with accurate and exact reproduction of the great pianist—but even that type of instrument is not good, because for screen accompaniment the musician must cut and fit and pattern his performance with the picture. If you're to have an organ of this or that type—in addition to the size of your pocketbook and possible returns on the music, one must consider the accoustics.

Not every instrument fits into every house—some buildings have certain peculiarities that special arrangements must be made to make the music sound equally well and powerful in all parts of the theatre.

After the instrument—How big can you make your orchestra? The bigger the better, I would say—it looks like success and sounds better. But for me, give me one good player than one hundred who play only fairly well. Get the judgment of a real musical authority before you engage your first man, and then leave it up to him after that. But always keep before the musical director this creed: "Don't just get quantity. Give me quality. Pay a little more if necessary and use fewer men, but give me the real musicians."

After the men and instruments are in hand, what about the library of music?

It isn't necessary to install an immense library of music at once, any more than it is necessary to engage a symphony orchestra before you can have music. But I would say that you want to have in your library at the start the best standard classics of opera and the orchestral repertoire.* One must keep up to date as well with the popular airs of the moment.

* In a forthcoming issue, Mr. Isaacson will publish a list of standard music which ought to be in every film library.

Now all that I have said so far relates to the matter of music for the picture.

Then it must be remembered that the interlude music—the performances in between the pictures—the feature songs, solos, overtures, etc., call for a special kind of attention.

With the coming of the music into the theatre has grown a need for further use of that music. The patrons liked the playing of the screen accompaniment so much that they asked for special numbers. Therefore, the orchestra always plays an overture, a composition which is written to open an entertainment with blare and triumph; overtures are used before all operas, musical shows, most stage plays and now in all high class picture houses. In the musical show it brings in advance the best bits in condensed form. In the picture theatre it can be used to create the kind of atmosphere which builds up to the feature picture, or it can be just a fine musical flourish. After the orchestra had its opportunity to play alone—the medleys of opera, the great overtures, symphonic works, popular bits, etc., the audience wanted also some solos.

So started the use of solo violinists, singers, pianists, dancers, etc. And later duets, trios, quartettes, etc.

One of the early steps in musical understanding is an appreciation of the opportunities for special musical numbers—the splendid and beautiful means of raising the standards of one's house.

It is essential that one be aware of the vast new interest in music—for people are literally hungry for it. This is partially due to the war's reaction, but comes from many other causes, which need not be analyzed again. Nevertheless, it is a fact that in the smallest town are many who wish a temple of music.

Therefore, when the exhibitor has once caught the spirit of the musical advantages he realizes that he can turn all that interest into his house.

He knows then that everything musical that's going on is manufacturing interest for his house (if he knows how to put the public mind in that state. He knows that every music store, orchestra, singer, teacher, music club will fly to his support

Gertrude Olmstead, chosen by the Chicago Elks as the most beautiful girl in the Middle West, who is appearing opposite Hoot Gibson in "Tipped Off," a Universal two-reel western

Prize Beauty a Success in Universal Pictures

Gertrude Olmstead, the winner of the middle west beauty contest, held last summer by the Chicago B. P. O. E., is making good in moving pictures, it is reported at Universal City. The little Illinois school girl was engaged by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, to appear in a series of Universal pictures, and eventually to be starred.

"Tipped Off," the first picture in which she appears, recently was completed at Universal City and now is being distributed.

Warner Bros. have closed a big deal with the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, whereby they take over, for the United States and Canada, the distribution, for a period of years, of ten two-reel Essanay-Chaplins. These have never been re-issued and it is the intention of Warner Bros. to State Right them, one a month, beginning with January, 1921.

A new line of advertising and lithographs is being prepared for each release.

The price paid for these comedies is understood to run into big figures.

It is expected that it will not take very long to dispose of the rights to the various exchanges, as with the forthcoming release of the five-reel Chaplin, "The Kid." these two-reelers should enjoy a very large volume of bookings. Arrangements are now being made with the Rialto and Rivoli theatres to show them in New York.

New Company Launched

Producers Service Company Will Handle Independent Productions

WITH a suite of offices on the twelfth floor of the Times Building, Harry D. Diggs and Hopp Hadley have launched an organization for independent producers, said to present several new angles which give promise of helping solve the problems of owners of producing companies both with and without New York offices.

Selecting Producers Service Company as the name best suggesting the usefulness of the new organization, the moving spirits have several different departments now functioning and, in spite of the fact that the name of the company never appears except on letter-heads used in corresponding with the different studios and distributors of independent productions for which it is doing business, its activities are already attracting attention both in Los Angeles and New York.

From the minute a new production is finished the value of Producers Service Company begins to be realized. The service is taken advantage of immediately or at any stage during the life of the subject. Where complete service is used, the producer makes the Producers Service Company offices in New York his eastern address and ships it his sample print. Posters, photographs, press books and all advertising accessories are prepared, an advertising and publicity campaign launched and a "trade-showing" given. Sales of state-right territory are then made or not, depending upon the decision as to the final disposition of the picture.

The personalities of the new Diggs-Hadley organization are, as far as their names are concerned, kept as much in the background as is the name of the company itself. These personalities are only considered valuable in so far as they inspire confidence in the company by the producer. Only the producer's name and such other names as he directs are used in the advertising and publicity, the space for all of which is the property of the producer and strictly held as such. This is made possible by making the producer's address the same as their own and is a point upon which they lay particular stress.

Praise "A Slave of Vanity"

Critics in Various Parts of the Country Hail Pauline Frederick

ACCORDING to a statement from the New York headquarters of the Robertson-Cole organization, "A Slave of Vanity," starring Pauline Frederick, is receiving a generous share of favorable notice from newspaper reviewers throughout the country.

Says the Baltimore American, which reviewed "A Slave of Vanity" when it was seen at the Picture Garden in Baltimore:

"'A Slave of Vanity,' Pinero's 'Iris' is a production which will interest the student of art as well as the lover of the drama. Pauline Frederick has a role just a little different from any she has thus far interpreted. She takes care of it excellently."

From the West Coast comes this tribute, appearing in the Sacramento, Calif. Union:

"Miss Frederick is seen in an unusually powerful role, that of a beautiful young society woman with wealth and high station. Miss Frederick paints an unforgettable picture of a woman rescued from her own selfishness by a great love."

Back in the East, the New York American said:

"Pauline Frederick, at all times one of the most beautiful and able actresses on the screen proves herewith that she is lovely and capable. "A Slave of Vanity" is adapted from a play which lends itself with dignity to the screen. The story is an engrossing one. It has suspense and sympathetic treatment. The backgrounds are magnificent. The exteriors are carefully chosen and beautifully photographed. Miss Frederick, at all times through the picture is beautiful and wears a number of gorgeous gowns."

The Wilkesbarre, Pa., Record commented:

"'A Slave of Vanity' tells a story so vital in theme and characterization and so rich in dramatic values that it seems to have been written especially for Pauline Frederick. This popular emotional star takes advantage of every opportunity to display her histrionic capabilities throughout the entire production and she gives color and variety to the role which calls for every mood of feminine nature."

Revier completed the filming of Edgar Rice Burroughs' story, "The Son of Tarzan," as a big special serial for the National Film Corporation. Roy Somerville prepared the photodrama. The world's rights to the serial are controlled by David P. Howells.

Miss Young Appears in Person to Aid Picture

Equity Pictures Corp., of New York, states that big results have been obtained in theatres throughout the East and Middle West because of the personal appearance of Clara Kimball Young in connection with the showing of "Midchannel."

Federated Gets New Product

To Distribute Entire Output of Walgreene Films

AN announcement is made by W. E. Shallenberger, general manager of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., of the closing of a contract between Walter E. Greene, president of the Walgreene Film Corporation, for the distribution of the Walgreene productions through the Federated exchanges.

The closing of this contract was one of the most important matters arranged at the meeting of the Federated members in St. Louis, and is considered by many in the film industry to be one of the most important transactions of the year, securing as it does for Federated three important productions already completed by the Walgreene Film Corporation and providing for the distribution of a number of pictures to be produced by Walgreene.

The first three productions already completed and which are to be released before January 1, 1921, are "The Servant in the House," "The Good Bad Wife" and "Hearts and Masks."

"The Servant in the House" is an H. C. Davis production of Charles Rann Kennedy's stage success of the same name, and is considered, by many who have seen it, to be one of the most remarkable photoplays ever produced. As a stage production it enjoyed a remarkable run, having been successfully shown for over five years and in fact is now being played by a touring company in Canada. Federated members are most enthusiastic over this production and it is confidently predicted that as a photoplay it will enjoy even greater success than it did in the spoken drama.

"The Good Bad Wife" is a film version of "The Wild Fawn," a novel by Mary Imlay Taylor, which is one of the most successful novels of recent years. It appeared in Munsey's Magazine. The cast is headed by Dorothy Green and Sydney Mason who are capably supported by an excellent cast.

The third production is "Hearts and Masks," from the novel of the same name by Harold McGrath, the cast of which is headed by Eleanor Field and Francis McDonald.

In commenting on the closing of this deal, Mr. Greene stated that it was the consummation of a long and careful investigation which he had conducted for several months past investigating on releasing mediums and stated that he felt that the Federated Exchanges offered by far the best medium of distribution of any organization in the motion picture field today. Mr. Greene said that one of the principal reasons for this was that Federated is composed of a number of independent exchangemen, each one of whom owned their own business and had a vital interest in the conduct of the business of their exchanges, and that for this reason, if for no other, he felt that the success of Federated was an assured matter. Mr. Greene feels that an organization such as Federated wherein each member owns his own business is much more apt to successfully distribute a production than a big corporation wherein the managers of the exchange are simply employees working on a salary and who have no vital interest in whether a picture is a success or not. In Federated each member is spending his own money and in distributing a picture he knows that he has to stand or fall by that production and he therefore makes every effort to secure the widest possible distribution for same in his territory.

General Manager Shallenberger states that Federated members are most enthusiastic over the arrangement made with the Walgreene Film Corporation for it secured for them three splendid productions which are ready for immediate release, and it assures them of a number of other important films which are now in course of production.

An intensive advertising campaign will be launched by Federated in behalf of these three productions in the near future. Prints on all three subjects may now be seen at every Federated exchange.

Sherman Producing Plans

Four Published Stories Will Be Bought: Two Stars Are Promised

WITH franchises allotted in all but a bare half dozen territories in the United States and with applications for the balance under consideration, Harry A. Sherman, president of Sherman Productions Corporation, announces that he is devoting his energies to the development of his production plans.

These plans, which are comprehensive in scope, contemplate the purchase of four or more of the published works of an eminent writer of popular fiction in America for screen presentation by Sherman Productions Corporation and the engagement of two well known stars, who will be seen in vehicles especially selected for them.

One of these artists, who, it is said, is now finishing a contract with one of the larger film companies, has already been definitely engaged to transfer to the Sherman banner immediately after the conclusion of the present picture, while the other, who is now on the Coast, is waiting Mr. Sherman's arrival there to complete the necessary details.

An early announcement will be made regarding both these players and the vehicles in which they will make their initial debut with Sherman Productions Corporation and it is predicted that the announcement will be in the nature of a decided surprise in film circles.

The Jans feature, "Madonnas and Men," opened at the Strand theatre, Toronto, to the biggest business in the history of that theatre, according to reports received at New York. Despite the worst storm of snow, sleet and rain that the Canadian city has experienced in some long time, at the first performance at the Strand over six thousand people paid advanced admission prices and waited outside to see the Jans feature. An additional crowd was turned away.

So successful has "Madonnas and Men" been in its initial presentation in Canada that arrangements are now under way, Jans announces, whereby the big feature will be booked and played in a chain of legitimate houses from coast to coast, the attraction being put on like a regulation road show and played on a percentage with guarantee.

"Vanishing Trails" Sold in No. New Jersey

Northern New Jersey is the latest territory to be sold on "Vanishing Trails," the Franklyn Farnum serial which the Canyon Pictures Corporation is distributing for Colonel William N. Selig.

The buyer of the Northern New Jersey rights was the Gersten Film Exchange which has offices in New York City. H. M. Black, the owner and proprietor of the Gersten Film Exchange, started immediately after the sale was concluded on a tour which will take him to every city and town in New Jersey which lies between Trenton on the south and the New York State line on the north.

The Canyon officials are now carrying on negotiations with the leading exchanges throughout the country and it is expected that within a very short time, the entire United States and Canada will be completely sold on this serial.

Two Florida Companies Consolidate

Deciding that it was better to join together than to split the business, the Juanita Films and the Volvan Films, of Tampa, Fla., have consolidated. The two companies are making a specialty of advertising service and commercial work.

New Home for Urban Subjects

Beautiful Building Will Be Known as Urban Institute

CHARLES URBAN, president of Kineto Company of America, announced this week the purchase of a magnificent piece of property at Irvington-on-the-Hudson, N. Y., which will be the future home of the Urban Motion Picture Industries, Inc., and the Kineto Company of America, Inc. The building will be known as Urban Institute.

The transfer of the property to the Urban interests has just been completed. Architects and engineers are already at work, and when their plans are completed and carried out the new home of the Urban products will be one of the show places of the motion picture world. Six months will probably see their work finished.

The building was erected originally for the Cosmopolitan Magazine, and was conceived and designed throughout by Stanford White, one of the finest architects America ever produced.

John Brisbane Walker, under whom the building was constructed, stated that the Cosmopolitan had erected the building in order to "dignify printing." It is Mr. Urban's attitude is the same, his desire to raise the standard of the motion picture as an educational force. This has been his ambition for the past twenty years.

The new building, which will be the basis of Urban Institute is on the high bank of the Hudson River a few hundred yards away from the New York Central Station at Irvington-on-the-Hudson. It is built in classical style, entirely of limestone, with the Corinthian motif throughout. It is topped by a massive dome.

It faces the Hudson and the broad expanse of the river and the lofty palisades across add to its individual beauty. In the rear it reaches into the fine wooded estates of that region.

Mr. Urban intends to make Urban Institute a Mecca for educators all over the world. "Visual education," he states, "is already a great big force, but it is only beginning despite its existing bigness. Urban Institute is going to be a home for all the educators and the artists of the motion picture world; it will be a place to bring ideas and also to get them. Everything that has to do with extending the utility and the beauty of the motion picture will be found there; the appliances, the subjects, the experts and all."

The Kineto Company of America is the publishing organization of Mr. Urban's educational pictures; the Movie Chats, the Kinto Review, the Science Series, the World Travel Series, and all the other series of one-reel pictures which will eventually form "The Living Book of Knowledge," a world encyclopedia in motion picture form.

The theatre world is already familiar with Mr. Urban's Movie Chats and his Science Series. They are to be seen regularly in such theatres as the Rivoli and Rialto in New York, and in theatres of similar standard throughout the country. The Kineto Review will be placed in general distribution shortly.

The projects that are inclined under the Urban Motion Picture Industries have needed a great deal more preparation than the Kineto projects, and in them is to be found the reason for this expansion. These include principally the Spirograph, which is the home and school projector, and the Kinekrom, which is the color process.

The Spirograph is an eleven-pound projecting machine, in principle the same as any large projecting apparatus, such as is to be found in theatres, and a picture record, much like any talking machine record. The device is meant for the home, the school room, the industrial plant, the traveling salesman, and for all fields of commercial pursuit.

The Kinekrom is the color process. One of the critics of a nationally circulated trade paper said they were the only color pictures ever shown that "stood the close-up of a man's face." The result is obtained from a filtering of colors when the negative is obtained and again in the projection of the positive print.

Both the Spirograph and the Kinekrom have been waiting for a permanent home for the Urban organization. Now that one has been obtained, it is likely that both these processes will be in production within six months.

The chances are, it is said, that the Spirograph machine will be available in quantity within that time, and that great feature pictures will be filmed in natural colors and available for theatres not long thereafter.

Rice Strengthens Eckels Staff

Executive Deserts Universal for Independent Film Ass'n

ONE of the surprises of the past week in film circles, and an event of significance in the eyes of those who foresee the continued strengthening of the independent field from the ranks of the program producing-distributing section of the industry, was the resignation of Harry Rice from Universal, and his connection with Eddy Eckels' executive staff in the Independent Films Association.

Harry Rice is one of the best known young executives in the industry. For over a year, in the capacity of director of publicity and exploitation for Universal, he was in touch with editors and exhibitors in every part of the world. For the past year he has been with Universal in the Middle West territory, with headquarters at Chicago, and his career prior to that time, including two years spent abroad, served to bring him in contact with every phase and angle of the film and theatrical business.

"I consider my present post with the Independent Films Association the biggest thing I have ever tackled," said Mr. Rice. "There are two reasons for this opinion. In the first place, the field of independent production and distribution of motion pictures has shown during the past year the most remarkable developments ever recorded in the history of the industry, and its supreme importance is now so clearly seen as to be beyond question.

"My second reason is the knowledge that in the organization which Eddy Eckels has built up, I am finding a connection with a big and important factor in the entire independent branch of the industry—an organization whose growth to power, influence and success has been ever more phenomenal than the growth of the market to which it caters."

Analysis of the independent situation convinced Mr. Eckels, who is responsible for the Independent Films Association, that the state right dealers needed series releases instead of single productions. He felt that if the independent exchange could offer a well-known star of established box-office power in a series of six or eight releases a year, backed up by continuous advertising of a sort that would gain cumulative value with the release of each successive picture, the exchanges could then offer the theatres exactly what they wanted and could compete successfully with the program people.

With this thought, the Independent Films Association was formed. And its first contract was for the series of eight outdoor productions starring Neal Hart. These eight pictures were being made by Pinnacle Productions, Inc.

Eckels sold his idea so thoroughly to the Independent dealers that within six weeks from the date of the first announcement, and thirty days prior to the date of release of the first picture in the series, the entire United States had been sold on the Neal Hart pictures.

Following the Hart series, Eckels contracted for the entire output of Calumet Productions, Inc., producers of two-reel comedies starring Leo White. These Pinnacle Comedies are now well established on the independent market, having been sold throughout the United States in a short space of time.

The personnel of the Independent Films Association at the present time, besides Eddy Eckels, president and general manager, and Harry Rice, who is entering the organization in the capacity of business manager, includes the following: Nathan A. Woody, treasurer; Richard Robertson, vice-president and advertising manager; H. E. Belford, sales manager; Howard Robertson, foreign sales representative; E. A. Barrymore, publicity; R. W. French, sales; J. R. Mahon, advertising; M. B. Raub, service manager; O. W. Moore, West Coast representative; A. D. Jenkins, special representative.

Herman J. Brown, former Idaho exhibitor, where, for several years he served as secretary to the Exhibitors' League, has been spending several months in Los Angeles preparatory to entering the exhibiting field in old Mexico. He departs for Mexico City during the coming week and will probably tour South America before he returns. What is reported to be the highest rental contract made for the Los Angeles territory was consummated last week by Walter Raul, manager of United Artists' Exchange for the showing of the coming Fairbanks release, "The Mark of Zorro," at Mack Sennett's new Mission theatre. The Fairbanks subject is to serve as the feature of the opening bill and the opening date is set for December 1. The contract provides for an indefinite run at a flat price which is nearly the five figure mark.

Paul N. Lazarus, manager of the sales promotion department of United Artists, has spent the past week in Los Angeles while on a tour of the exchanges. He returned East via San Francisco and Denver.

All Previous Records Smashed

"Mark of Zorro" Has Grand Opening at Capitol

IN a statement eminating from the New York headquarters of the United Artists' Corporation, the announcement is made that the opening of Douglas Fairbanks' newest production, "The Mark of Zorro," at the Capitol theatre, New York, on Sunday, November 28th, was marked by the smashing of "every known record for box-office receipts and attendance in a single day in any one thetre in the world." Samuel L. Rothapfel, of the Capitol, in a report to Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists' Corporation, declares that a total of 19,547 persons witnessed the showing of "The Mark of Zorro," on the initial day of its Capitol presentation, and that the paid admissions registered at the box-office totaled the unprecedented sum of $11,706.23.

"The news of the unusually spectacular picture spread through New York City like wildfire on the opening day, and long before five o'clock after the first matinee the house was crowded to its capacity," continues the United Artists' statement. "Long before the evening performances began it was impossible to jam any more people into the theatre, and the patrons stood in lines four-abreast for a block long, waiting to purchase tickets. Police reserves were called out to take care of the crowds which were extremely orderly, and at nine-thirty, despite the fact that there were hundreds still waiting to buy tickets, the box-office was closed and the police ordered the public to move on."

Mr. Rothapfel stated that had it been possible he could easily ran a midnight performance and packed the house another time.

The opening day was not the only record breaker, however, for the Monday following the opening was the biggest Monday in the history of the theatre, barring, however, holidays, it is stated.

"There is no doubt in my mind that the box-office record for the Capitol theatre will be smashed to small bits," said Mr. Rothapfel, "for this picture in my mind is the greatest production that Mr. Fairbanks has ever made. There is so much rapid fire action, such wonderful love making in the dual role, such a multitude of neck-breaking stunts, a wonderful amount of mirth and surprises together with a gingery mixture of drama, comedy, love adventure and thrills, that it has something in it for every one, something that makes every one go out and talk about it. Besides being a corking entertainment, it is in my mind one of the greatest box-office attractions that the industry has ever had the pleasure of having. Doug certainly is to be congratulated most heartily on this his greatest success."

There wasn't a dissenting criticism among the reviewers on this picture, the critics all agreeing that there was more real value to this production than any of Fairbanks former pictures, and that it will be a sensation everywhere.

"There is no doubt but that this production will be a joy forever and ever among exhibitors when it will be released generally on December 5th for every patron who has seen the picture departed from the Capitol theatre with that feeling of satisfaction that they had seen by far the best picture in which the vigorous Doug had ever appeared in," announces the statement from the United Artists' headquarters.

The story is an adaptation of Johnston McCulley's novel, "The Curse of Capistrano," which appeared in the All Story Weekly magazine.

Facts on Metro's Production of Ibanez' Novel

The following statistics have been set forth in a statement from the New York headquarters of the Metro Pictures Corporation as descriptive of the magnitude of the production work entailed in turning out "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," based on the novel by Ibanez:

"'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse' realizes the producer's dream of 'the million dollar picture.'

"The screen version of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's epochal novel took more than six months to complete.

"Upwards of 12,000 persons were engaged in the undertaking.

"More than 125,000 tons of masonry, steel, lumber, furniture and shrubbery—in excess of the materials used in the Woolworth Building—were used in constructing the massive settings for the colossal spectacle.

"An entire French village, capable of housing 6,000 souls, was put up and then destroyed before the camera lens.

"Every house in this village was finished throughout, instead of being a front.

"A costume factory was erected on the Metro studio grounds for 'dressing' the production.

"An armory and two machine shops were incidentals of the other building operations.

"More than 500,000 feet of raw film was exposed in the taking of the picture, which when shown on the screen will not exceed 12,000 feet.

"Fourteen camera men were employed to 'shoot' the big scenes from every angle, and Rex Ingram, the director, at times had fourteen directors assisting him.

"It will require weeks to weed out and assemble the completed scenes from the eighty-five miles of film exposed; the mere running of 500,000 feet of film through a projection machine at the rate of sixty feet a minute would consume eighteen days of eight working hours each.

"Field kitchens and a complete commissary organization were required to feed the army of 12,500 persons engaged on the production.

"Several new mechanical devices for special photographic effects, for which patents have been issued, were used for the first time in taking the picture.

"A complete telephone system was installed for the use of the director while handling some of the great scenes. He was in constant touch with his assistants, scattered on posts over several miles of terrain.

"A collection of art treasures from galleries and private sources, valued beyond price, was used in dressing the handsome interior settings. The insurance alone on these art works was $375,000.

"The cast interpreting the roles in the most widely read book of all time, excepting the Bible, contains two dozen principal players who in other productions would be rated as stars."

Under the added stimulus of the Pearson Month Contest the sales campaign in progress at the Pathe branches on the new serial release, "Velvet Fingers," an unusually heavy total is reported to be mounting up as the release date for the Seitz production approaches, announces Pathe. "Velvet Fingers" will succeed to a big majority of the screens being vacated by "Ruth of the Rockies," which it will supplant on the Pathe schedule, according to the information received from branch managers.

"Velvet Fingers" is the fourth contribution to the Pathe program by the producing unit organized and now being operated under the guidance of George B. Seitz. That company produced "Bound and Gagged" as its first work. This was followed by "Pirate Gold," "The Phantom Foe" and "Velvet Fingers."

Seeks Closer Touch With Fans

Geo. Beban to Appear in Person at Many Picture Houses

GEORGE BEBAN and Sol Lesser ended their cross-country tour this week, arriving in New York on Saturday after having stopped off and conferred with many film executives in the large cities between Los Angeles and New York.

In a statement issued on Monday, Mr. Beban in a brief manner summed up the reasons for his Eastern visit and spoke of his plans for the future.

"I have a new angle on picture presentation and I am going to try it out personally," said Mr. Beban. "I have made arrangements whereby I shall remain away from my West Coast studios for several months during which time I am to appear personally in the large cities of the United States and Canada in connection with my new picture, 'One Man in a Million.'"

George Beban feels that "personal contact" between star and fan will soon become a paramount factor in the picture problem. "The time is fast arriving when the picture public will demand a closer relationship between themselves and the film celebrities," said Mr. Beban.

Mr. Beban further stated that keener co-operation between the producer and exhibitors was essential, inferring that artists and producers were holding themselves on too high a pedestal and that their assistance to the theatre-owner and exhibitor was somewhat lacking.

"One of the greatest steps toward the advancement of the motion picture is the 'frame' or method of presentation," said the star. "Some folks call it a prologue—I refer to the tableux or theatrically speaking, a sketch that has some bearing on the presentation of the picture proper. The picture public, now educated to this added form of entertainment, and always craving something now are now demanding an added feature—they want to see the film star in the flesh. I am what one would say, 'blazing the trail'—I am making a path that I am sure will be followed by many important film celebreties. I feel the time will soon come when every picture star of any prominence will arrange his or her time to personally appear in the big cities once each year.

"If I should say too much now, it would spoil it for the proper time. All I will say is that I have a well formed routine of talk that is going to be a mighty big surprise to all. I will probably occupy the stage for fifteen minutes after my picture has been seen and I aim to have a message for the picture public that will please all—old and young alike."

The Beban tour will begin within a few weeks, New York being the opening city. The star will spend from eight to ten weeks in the Eastern exchange cities and from that time he will work West, finally arriving in Los Angeles where he will terminate his personal appearance tour at the Kinema theatre there, it is stated.

Sol Lesser leaves for the Coast this week after having arranged all distribution matters for the "One Man in a Million" attraction. Mr. Lesser is making a careful survey of all theatre conditions in the East and Middle West and will probably carry some new ideas to California where he, in conjunction with the Gore Bros., controls a chain of 37 theatres.

New Superior's Activities

Successor of Hemmer Company to Produce and Buy Theatres

O. E. CHANEY AND COMPANY of Wall street, have issued a statement concerning the proposed activities of the New Superior Productions, Inc., which has succeeded the Hemmer Superior Productions, Inc., as producers of future pictures.

New Superior Productions, Inc., plans also establishing and having in operation a series of at least ten popular priced Superior theatres as soon as possible.

The company has completed its first large feature production "Birthright." It is said to be fully paid for, and the corporation has no indebtedness, its only obligation being for the ordinary current running expenses.

Arrangements are now being made to market this production upon the best obtainable conditions, to be booked for early release to standard motion picture theatres. In addition to the production of motion pictures, the company is financially interested in another source of revenue through ownership of approximately thirty per cent interest in a distribution company known as the "Allied Independent Attractions, Inc." This particular corporation will have charge of the distribution of all productions of the New Superior Productions, Inc. Harry Leonhardt, former owner of the California theatre of Los Angeles, Cal., well known in the motion picture industry is president of the Allied Independent Attractions, Inc. He is assisted by Harvey Day.

The officers of the new company include Lewis Hopkins Rogers, chairman of the board; W. S. Silkworth, president of the Consolidated Stock Exchange, treasurer; F. Ernest Grubb, chartered accountant as secretary. The Security Transfer and Registrar Company will act as transfer agent and registrar.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Monroe Salisbury, star of the Pioneer feature, "The Barbarian"

Author's Name Quoted Incompletely

In announcing the author of "It's Never Too Late to Mend," a story scheduled for production by Universal with Eva Novak in the lead, the writer's name was quoted incompletely as "Helen Christine." The author's name in full should read, "Helen Christine Bennett." The word "Bennett" was omitted in transcribing the telegram from the West Coast which conveyed the information of the authorship of "It's Never Too Late to Mend."

The first spread of advertising paper to be posted by William Fox in his pre-showing campaign for "Blind Wives," to be released December 19, made its appearance in New York City late in the week ending November 27. The 24-sheets advertising the screen version of Edward Knoblock's stage play, "My Lady's Dress," were blended into the outdoor situation on local billboards to an extent that covered every borough of the greater city.

The first "spread" indicated the general effect of the entire series of billing—to show the lure of luxury to women. Just as fast as the work can be accomplished the larger centers throughout the country will be posted in the Fox drive to herald the Knoblock photoplay in advance of the public showing in theatres that specialize in first runs. Press-books are now available for this subject.

New Vitagraph Exchanges

Exchanges Now Number 27; Secures Larger Quarters in Ten Cities

WHILE Vitagraph has been increasing its production facilities during the past year through the acquisition of additional land, the erection of new buildings and the installation of the most modern methods and machinery in its laboratories, so that now it is at the highest production point in its history, it has also improved its distribution chain, nearly every link of which has been strengthened during the past year and a half.

In a little more than a year it has added three new and important exchanges to its system, and either built new homes or leased greatly enlarged quarters for nine other existing branch offices in the most important cities. The Vitagraph exchanges in the United States and Canada now number 27, and the entire organization is at its highest point of perfection. In several cases the new quarters appeared to be even more than the occasion required, but constantly increasing popularity of Vitagraph's new productions have proved the advisability of taking time by the forelock, it is stated.

In ten of the largest cities it has been found necessary to secure larger branch offices. These are Philadelphia, Kansas City, New Orleans, Washington, D. C.; Seattle, Denver, St. John, N. B.; Dallas, Chicago, San Francisco and New York. In the last named city the general offices moved to new offices at 469 Fifth avenue.

In Seattle, Dallas, Chicago and San Francisco new buildings were erected. The new Chicago exchange, at 839-843 South Wabash avenue, cost approximately $200,000. The new Dallas exchange is at 1801-3 Commerce street.

Harold Lloyd's New Series

Contract Provides Him with "Unprecedented Sum" for His Work

PATHE in a statement just issued announces the start of the first Harold Lloyd Comedy for Associated Exhibitors. Under his contract with Associated Exhibitors, says Pathe, Lloyd will receive "an unprecedented sum for every photoplay accepted by the Associated Exhibitors." The Rolin Film Company will continue to produce the Harold Lloyd comedies, and Pathe will continue as the distributing organization of the laugh-getting Lloyd products. The Pathe statement tells how it was that Harold Lloyd started on his present comedy career which has placed him in the forefront of the screen's comedians.

"Just a year ago, Paul Brunet, of Pathe, announced that he would star Harold Lloyd in a series of two-reel feature comedies. Lloyd had been making good comedies—in fact, excellent comedies. But there was a good deal of slapstick, knock-down and drag out in them.

"Pathe decided to set a new standard in screen farce-comedy They declared for genuine humor, based on comic plot and situation. Two requirements were stipulated by the producers: The photoplays must be funny—screamingly funny, if possible—from start to finish. And they must be clean. No suggestive, vulgar or indecent action would be tolerated. They were determined to demonstrate that the motion picture public really wanted wholesome entertainment. Still, it was something of an experiment, and, sensibly enough, Lloyd agreed to work for what was a modest salary for a man of his box office power.

"Lloyd dropped slapstick like a hot potato. He made his bow as a clean-shaven, well-tailored, rather scholarly-looking young man wearing large, shell-rimmed spectacles. He secured Mildred Davis as his leading woman. Then things begin to happen to them. They are involved in all sorts of ludicrous difficulties, provided in the story material. And, like the skilled raconteur of witty jokes, each keeps a serious face through it all and allows the audience to enjoy its laugh at their expense."

Bruce Picture Featured in Detroit House

Marjorie Cook's Story for Mae Marsh

Robertson-Cole announces the return of Mae Marsh to the screen in "The Little 'Fraid Lady." The picture is described to be a photoplay of great dramatic and artistic value. Diversification of locale in the story and an interesting theme which weaves its way through all walks of life are said to give the production an element of universal appeal. Marjorie Benton Cook's novel, "The Girl Who Lived in the Woods," forms the basis for the picture. Joseph Farnham did the screen adaptation. In Miss Marsh's supporting cast appear Tully Marshall, Kathleen Kirkham, Charles Meredith, Gretchen Hartman and Herbert Prior.

New Realart Star Is Arousing Interest

Justine Johnstone in "Blackbirds," her first Realart picture, is arousing widespread enthusiasm, judging from reports received from cities where the production is being shown, announces the Realart office.

In Ohio her beauty and acting ability found a ready welcome and in Colorado the Realart star met with an equally hearty reception. The Rialto theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, ran "Blackbirds" during the week of November 1.

The fact that Miss Johnstone, while a member of the Ziegfeld Follies, attracted the attention of artists and theatregoers by her beauty did not escape the attention of Hamilton critics who praised her as an actress as well as a beauty.

Two scenes from the new Christie comedy to be distributed by Educational Exchanges, Inc., "Back from the Front"

Torchy Comedies "Promoted"

Many Chains Advance Them to Largest Theatres

ACCORDING to Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., a remarkable record has been set by Torchy Comedies, in that during the past 60 days these two-reel pictures have shown an increase of fifty per cent in the number of theatres of the very first quality in which they are booked. In practically every city in the country these films made from the stories by Sewell Ford and starring Johnny Hines are being shown in the leading house and reports from managers say that the audience pulling power is showing remarkable gains.

Still another significant fact cited by Educational is that in many instances where contracts had been signed for this series by exhibitors owning a chain of theatres in a city, they have been almost without exception taken out of the smaller houses and placed in the leading theatre where they could appeal to larger audiences.

From one batch of programs Educational points out these theatres, all parts of chains and which represent the very best in their respective communities all played Torchy pictures last week. "Torchy on High," at the Riviera in Chicago; the Rialto in Denver and the New in Baltimore; "Torchy Turns Cupid," at the Tivoli, San Francisco; the New Garrick, in Minneapolis; the Alhambra, in Cleveland, and Moore's Rialto, in Washington; "Torchy's Millions," at the Liberty, in Seattle; the Stabley in Philadelphia, and the Walnut, Cincinnati.

"This" comments the Educational statement, "speaks far more strongly for the picture than a mere list of bookings. A greater share of the bookings themselves to the principal circuits of the country we announced some time ago, but now the record that is being made by the pictures themselves is convincing exhibitors that these are among the very best comedies they have—and therefore they are transferring their run to their leading theatres. Since they have already their contracts there could be but one thing inspiring this switch—that the comedies have unusual audience pulling power and therefore they want to take advantage of their largest seating capacities.

"Besides the quality of the pictures themselves there are two reasons for this. First, so many exhibitors have had such unfortunate experiences with most so called 'tieups' with publishers that they did not expect an advantage from this one, even though millions have read the seven Sewell Ford volumes. They are now learning that these millions want to see these pictures. According to the publishers the appearance of the pictures vastly increased the demands for the books themselves.

"The second reason is that while every one of the comedies is absolutely complete in itself they have all the pulling power of the serial because the same chief character is carried through them, and because patrons know that each one will afford a wealth of clean fun, but without burlesque or utter impossibilities."

Critics Praise "Godless Men"

Nat'l. Bd. of Review Gives High Place to Feature

GOLDWYN'S production of "Godless Men," a Reginald Barker Production, based upon Ben Ames Williams' sea tale, "Black Pawl," is given a place of honor in the new medium for reviewing pictures just inaugurated by the National Board of Review called Exceptional Photoplays. The first issue is just out and bears date of November, 1920. Three other productions were selected for review in this issue, "Passion," "The Sin That Was His" and "The Devil's Garden."

Believing that the time was ripe for undertaking a critique of the best photoplays that would give a more serious appraisal of motion pictures than is usually bestowed upon them, the National Board has named a Committee on Critique, consisting of eleven members whose duty it is to pick out those pictures having unusual qualifications—outstanding dramatic, artistic, pictorial and instructive entertainment quality—for review. Pictures are chosen for consideration by a two-thirds vote of the Review Group originally seeing the production. The film is then discussed by the Board's General Committee and passed on to the Committee on Critique where it is accepted or rejected for review in Exceptional Photoplays in executive session.

"Godless Men," announces Goldwyn, "not only stood up under this test but is ranged first in the four pictures selected for review in the first issue of the Board's reviewing organ. After detailing an outline of the story the critique continues:

"And now the action proceeds with such unerring force and sureness that it creates not only a picture of exceptional merit but a tragedy so well motivated that it leaves the spectator with that peculiar exaltation which the true tragic masters have always been able to extract out of the very heart of pain.

"To this and Mr. Reginald Barker as producer has notably contributed. Just as Black Pawl's ship harbors all the forces which both destroy and purify him, so the producer has managed to keep the whole action on board the ship Throughout the five reels, there is no change of scene except from deck to cabin and no scenery beyond the sea and sky. This bold concentration lends the picture an extraordinary unity. It is hardly noticed unless called to your attention. And yet it has a very subtle effect. For it lends the ship dramatic personality and really makes it a part of the cast.

"And yet the finest achievement of 'Godless Men' might easily have been missed had the cast been less skilfully chosen. The acting throughout this picture is marked by a return to that fine naturalism which has almost been crowded out of our films by the pretty-pretty school of actresses and the slapdash swagger type of actor. Helene Chadwick, as the only woman on the ship, under peculiarly trying circumstances, gives a notable portrait of fearless innocence."

Universal Arranges Song Tie-up

SPECIAL arrangements are being made by Universal for the exploitation of its release, starring Dorothy Phillips. Exhibitor aids and tie-ups are being planned with elaborate care, according to a statement from the Universal headquarters. The singing of the old-time melody, "Ben Bolt," in conjunction with the showing of the picture, is one of the special stunts being arranged. How this idea was originated is explained in the following statement from the Universal offices:

"This tie-up with 'Ben Bolt' came about almost by accident. When Universal planned to present the picture by a private showing at the Hotel Astor, it was decided to precede the showing by a vocal rendition of the song. Miss Mabelle Nash, a lyric soprano of considerable prestige, was engaged. Shortly before the showing, it was suggested that Miss Nash sing during the showing, at the point in the picture where the heroine, Miss Phillips, sings 'Ben Bolt' at her mother's bed side.

"After several trials, the singer found she could follow Miss Phillips' lips to the fraction of a second. The effect of this 'stunt' at the Hotel Astor presentation was miraculous. The audience gasped as the words of the old song, in clear and bell-like tones, floated out, apparently from the mouth of the actress on the screen. So moved were the visiting exhibitors, that a large percentage of them who later booked the picture, requested Miss Nash's personal appearance at their theatres.

"The singer has appeared in more than a dozen theatres in and around New York City, duplicating the 'magic voice' effect she created in the original showing. Exhibitors in other sections have engaged local singers and those who have not been able to arrange for the identical method of presentation, have tied up with local Victrola shops and reproduced the voice by a well-timed record of 'Ben Bolt' sung by Geraldine Farrar."

High-Class Houses Back "The Riddle: Woman"

Practically every important exhibitor interest in the country will be represented in the final list of bookings on "The Riddle: Woman," the first Associated Exhibitors release through Pathe, according to the rate at which bookings of this character have been received to date, declares a statement received from the Associated Exhibitors' headquarters. Every effort has been made to reach exhibitors of the highest class and the sales forces have not yet begun to reach out for volume business, it is stated.

The remarkable success of the exploitation used in support of the picture in Boston and Seattle, where it was shown at Clemmer's theatre, has encouraged strong exploitation in other centers and many original ideas are being put forth by theatre managers and press representatives, according to the statement.

Paramount Prepares to Launch New "Big Stock Company"

All Stars in East to Go West Upon Completion of Current Pictures

EVIDENCE of the earnestness of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in putting into effect its series of super-star productions in which the entire Paramount producing organization is to be merged into one big stock company, was given yesterday in a telegram received at the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation from Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president, summoning all the Paramount stars who are now in the East to Hollywood, where they will begin at once on a number of big special productions.

Following conferences with Adolph Zuker, president of Famous Players, who is now in Hollywood, and with Cecil B. DeMille, Mr. Lasky wired the home office that as soon as the pictures they are now working on are completed the various Paramount stars now in the East shall go at once to Hollywood. Elsie Ferguson will leave next Friday to begin work immediately upon her arrival on "Arnold Bennett's "Sacred and Profane Love," under the direction of William D. Taylor. Thomas Meighan, who is nearing the completion of "The Quarry;" Dorothy Dalton, who has practically finished "The Teaser," Ethel Clayton, who is nearly finished with "The Price of Possession," and Billie Burke are among the stars now in the East who have been called to Los Angeles to appear together in special productions.

So enthusiastic is Mr. Lasky over the new policy, it was announced that he plans to give all the big super-star specials his personal attention.

Coincident with his decision to begin the new super-star production at once Mr. Lasky announced that weather conditions and location facilities made it imperative that these big productions be made in the West. The presence of all the Paramount stars in the West he announced, will make it possible to expand the facilities in the Eastern studio to a point where eight big special productions can be taken care of at the same time. In the three months in which the studio has been in operation it has been found that certain additional facilities are necessary to take care of a large number of special productions. So that it will be in a position to handle its program of specials under Mr. Lasky's personal supervision when he returns in February, he ordered that work be started at once on certain alterations necessary to the handling of a number of special productions. To allow greater speed in the making of the alterations the studio will be temporarily closed.

Changes are to be made in the layout of the studio floor and the lower stage is to be fitted up immediately with $100,000 worth of electrical appliances. The carpenter shop will be enlarged to twice its present scope, and additional warehouse space is to be provided to give further facility for the quick handling of big sets.

In summoning the stars to Hollywood, Mr. Lasky also is taking advantage of the presence there of the group of famous authors whom he has engaged to write directly for Paramount Pictures. Edward Knoblock is now at work on an original story, which will soon be put into production with an all-star cast. Elinor Glyn has completed her first original photoplay, in which Gloria Swanson will star. A well-known star, yet to be announced, will play the male lead.

Avery Hopwood, who returned to New York this week, will go back to Hollywood at once to confer with Cecil B. DeMille, who soon will begin on his super-star "Anatol." Sir Gilbert Parker and George H. Melford are preparing a big production in which Dorothy Dalton will star. Sir Gilbert already has completed his photoplay, "The Money Master," starring Dorothy Dalton.

Henry Arthur Jones, who arrived last week from Europe, is going shortly to Hollywood, where he will begin work on a new production, the script of which already has been turned over to Famous Players. Who will direct this picture and who will play the leading roles will be announced later.

It was pointed out that Famous Players is in an admirable position to concentrate its energies on its new policy of super-star specials as enough pictures already have been completed or are nearing completion to fill its release schedule for the rest of this season.

Besides the pictures set down for release in December, these pictures already have been completed or are nearing completion: Maurice Tourneur's "The Bait," with Hope Hampton; George Melford's production, "The Jucklins," by Opie Read, with Monte Blue; Wallace Reid in "The Charm School;" Billie Burke in "The Education of Elizabeth;" the Cosmopolitan production, "The Inside of the Cup;" Douglas MacLean in the Thomas H. Ince production, "The Rookie's Return." DeMille's production, "Forbidden Fruit;" Douglas MacLean in "Chickens," a Thomas H. Ince production; the Cosmopolitan production, "The Passionate Pilgrim," with Matt Moore; Charles Maigne's production "The Kentuckians," with Monte Blue.

Ethel Clayton in Hugh Ford's production, "The Price of Possession;" a Lois Weber production, "What Do Men Want?" Leonard's production, "The Gilded Lily," starring Mae Murray; John S. Robertson's production of "Sentimental Tommy;" William DeMille's production of Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows;" Wallace Reid in "The Daughter of a Magnate;" Sydney Chaplin in "King, Queen and Joker," Hugh Ford's production of "The Great Day;" "The Mystery Road," a Famous-Lasky British production, with David Powell.

Ince production; William D. Taylor's production of Augustus Thomas's play, "The Witching Hour;" the Cosmopolitan production, "Profits;" the Thomas H. Ince-Joseph Vance production, "Beau Revel;" the Ince-Vance production, "The Brass Bowl."

Big pictures which are to go into production immediately under the super-star system will include Cecil B. DeMille's production of Schnitzler's "The Affairs of Anatol;" George H. Melford production of "You Can't Fool Your Wife" by Hector Turnbull; Elsie Ferguson in "Sacred and Profane Love;" "Is Matrimony a Failure?" with Thomas Meighan in the leading male role; Gloria Swanson in "Everything for Sale," a William DeMille production of an original script by Edward Knoblock; George Melford's production of "The Money Master," an original story by Sir Gilbert Parker and Cecil B. DeMille's production of an original story by Avery Hopwood, author of "The Gold Diggers" and a large number of other successful plays.

Fox Special Used as a Theme in Pulpits

Despite the fact that the William Fox special production "Over the Hill," now enjoying its eleventh week of prosperity on Broadway and its fourth week at the Lyric theatre, in New York, will not be shown in neighborhood motion picture theatres during 1920, 1921, 1922, the beautiful story adapted from Will Carleton's famous "Farm Ballads" has already been selected as the topic for a series of illustrated lectures throughout New York State and New Jersey.

"Over the Hill" has already been selected as the topic for a Sunday evening sermon by Dr. Lincoln Caswell, of the Crawford Memorial Church, in the Bronx. Later Dr. Henry R. Rose, of the Church of the Redeemer in Newark, N. J., selected the Fox picture for an illustrated lecture which he gave before a big audience.

Lesser Buys Joan Series

Billy West Comedies Are Purchased by Western Exchangeman

SOL LESSER, the California exchangeman, purchased the series of twelve Billy West comedies from Joan Film Sales Co., during his visit of New York last week. This is said to have been the first deal closed by Lesser after his arrival in the East. Negotiations had been pending for some time between Louis Hyman, manager of Lesser's interests in San Francisco and Joan had been pending for several weeks, but the bargain was not struck until Lesser saw the comedies himself.

The purchase of the Billy West comedies coincided with the news of the re-organization and expansion of Lesser's film activities on the coast, as sole director of the affairs of the All-Star Feature Distributors of San Francisco and Los Angeles. It is understood that the Billy West comedies will be shown in all the theatres operated by Irving Lesser and Gore. They are scheduled for early release this fall, and a complete supply of advertising and publicity material has been sent off to the coast.

Lesser declared that the outlook in the Far West as far as motion-pictures are concerned is extremely encouraging. As a proof of the bright prospects he pointed to the additional number of theatres his brother Irving and Gore have bought lately. The presentation of the best grade of product will overcome any slump anywhere, was his claim.

Fitzmaurice Goes Abroad

Sailed Last Week for London; to Produce at Famous Players' Plant

GEORGE FITZMAURICE, director of Paramount specials, sailed last week for London, where he will make a picture for Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., at the studio at Islington, London. He will join his wife, Ouida Bergere, the author and adaptor of many of his pictures, who has been in London several weeks.

Mr. Fitzmaurice is the third Paramount director to be sent to London in the last few weeks, the others being Paul Powell and Donald Crisp, who are now engaged in making pictures with British casts. Hugh Ford, the first director sent to the London studio, returned to America to work in the new Long Island city studio, after making two pictures abroad.

"Paying the Piper," the fourth Fitzmaurice Paramount special, made from an original story by Ouida Bergere, was cut and assembled by Mr. Fitzmaurice before he departed for Europe. This is an absorbing story of the havoc wrought in the lives of typical New Yorkers by their worship of money and their final regeneration when they lose their wealth and are made to shift for themselves. Dorothy Dickson, the famous dancer and stage beauty, makes her screen debut in this film.

Good Cast in "East Lynne"

Mabel Ballin and Edward Earle at Head of Cast in Hugo Ballin Film

HUGO BALLIN, who is engaged in creating the screen version of "East Lynne," has chosen for this production an all-artist cast. Heading the aggregation of players who will vitalize this stirring story is Mabel Ballin. Miss Ballin achieved a personal triumph in Hugo Ballin's first independent production "Pagan Love," a picturization of Achmed Abdullah's story, "The Honorable Gentleman," but it is said that in this newer picture she will over-step this as well as her other successes in the past. Miss Ballin has appeared in Charles Dillingham's productions for three years. She has also played leads with Maurice Tourneur, Sessue Hayakawa and in various Vitagraph, Universal and Goldwyn pictures.

Another important role is played by Edward Earle, "the original O. Henry man," who will be remembered for his work in those charming Vitagraph comedies. Gladys Coburn, who recently completed "The Foreigner," playing opposite Gaston Glass, has been entrusted with another important role. The remainder of the cast includes Gilbert Rooney and Henry G. Sell.

'Black Beauty' Seen as Hit

Vitagraph President Says Picture Has Artistic and Commercial Value

IN its forthcoming special production, "Black Beauty," Vitagraph expects the greatest super-feature in its quarter-century of making motion pictures. This special, adapted from the classic by Anna Sewell, will be the first big picture available to exhibitors with the coming of the new year and promises to set a standard for 1921, declares Vitagraph.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, who has been on the Coast for several weeks and has seen "Black Beauty" take form in several stages, offers the novel adaptation as an example of that ideal in pictures: The artistic, plus the commercial picture.

Two of the persons back East who are counting the days until they can see "Black Beauty" on the screen are Lillian and George Randolph Chester, who made what Director David Smith styled "a perfect continuity." Mr. Smith has faithfully interpreted the story in screen form with the necessary enlargement of the activities of the human characters as described by the beloved horse in his autobiography, declares Vitagraph.

In addition to the artistry of its production, "Black Beauty" is said to have a strong commercial side. For years the book has been read by children and adults and ranks in popularity with the first half dozen classics of all time. This makes it one of the greatest "family pictures" ever available to exhibitors, according to Vitagraph officials. The showman has all ages to draw on for patronage, it is said, with the certainty that all will enjoy and understand the story.

Further, Jean Paige appears as the sympathy-winning heroine. "Black Beauty's" life parallels hers with vicissitudes and each share in the happy ending. James Morrison plays opposite Miss Paige, with George Webb in the heavy role.

Exteriors Taken on the Vanderbilt Estate

The Vanderbilt estate at Douglaston, L. I., served Hugh Ford well for some of the exterior scenes for "The Price of Possession," Ethel Clayton's latest picture for Paramount. The scenes at the estate represent the vicinity of Solvergate, Surrey, England, in the story which was written by Winfred Boggs, the English author. Other scenes representing Barston Manor were taken on the picturesque estate of George Ahrens at Port Chester, N. Y.

Second Louise Lovely Picture Is Ready

The second William Fox production in which Louise Lovely is starred will soon be released. It is titled "Partners of Fate." Miss Lovely's first picture for Fox, "The Little Grey Mouse," was well received by exhibitors and established her in favor with the public.

Supporting Miss Lovely in "Partners of Fate" is William Scott, who has appeared in a score of Fox pictures. Then there is Rosemary Theby and Philo McCullough and George Seigmann, and Richard Cummings. The baby in the play is Eileen O'Malley.

"Partners of Fate" was written by Stephen Chalmers and Robert Dillion wrote the scenario. Bernard Durning directed the picture. Incidentally this is Durning's first Fox picture.

Exhibitor Recommends Realart Release

Y. S. McLaren managing director of the Majestic theatre, Jackson, Mich., in announcing the showing of "The Soul of Youth" at his theatre, wrote:

"It is with pleasure that I personally endorse 'The Soul of Youth' to our patrons. It has a real story; it has an abundance of heart interest; a wonderful cast—and best of all it has a powerful appeal to every youth of the nation, as well as to every mother and father. Need I say more than that I personally guarantee it will please 100 per cent of those who see it."

Well-Known Writer on Universal's Staff

E. W. Guyol, formerly foreign correspondent for the New York Herald, and the author of many magazine stories, has been engaged for the scenario department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has been assigned to the studio staff, and has already arrived at Universal City. His first work for Universal will be the adaptation of "My Lady of the Island," a novel by Beatrice Grimshaw. Edith Roberts will be starred in the picture.

Fox Western Studio Enlarged

More Than $1,000,000 to Be Spent in Improvements

IMPROVEMENTS at the William Fox West Coast studios, involving the expenditure of a million or more dollars, is announced by General Manager Winfield R. Sheehan, of Fox Film Corporation. New stages, new lighting equipment and a general beautification of the lot are comprised in the enlargements necessary for the increased activities on the part of the entire Fox organization. It is declared that the opening of the new Fox studios in New York has resulted in no curtailment in West Coast activities; indeed, production has been stimulated on both coasts to keep step with the plans Mr. Fox has matured for the future.

Among the principal building activities is a new dark stage already well along toward completion on the East lot. This will be known as Dark Stage No. 3. Another dark stage of the same dimensions (75x200 feet) and to be known as Dark Stage No. 4, will be built paralleling No. 3. Representing the latest development in studio construction, these new stages will be particularly well equipped with lights.

The Western Avenue sides of No. 3 and the carpenter shop (which is being increased by 4,500 square feet of new construction) are being finished in stucco plaster, which will add to the attractiveness of that vista of the street. The extension to the carpenter shop will accommodate a new band-saw, a new planer and a new blower and ventilating system for the entire shop.

A new plaster shop, 30x60 feet, is planned to take care of the increasing amount of plaster work and clay modelling executed for William Fox productions. Mr. Fox has broken away from flat stencilling for sets where sculptured effects are necessary and instead is incorporating actual sculpture created by his own staff of artisans.

Another innovation will be a blacksmith and sheet-metal shop, 30x60 feet, on the site of the present equipment. Several cottages at the Northern end of the East lot are coming down to make room for lumber sheds 20x150 feet—to afford storage for sufficient lumber to provide for all needs of the studio.

On Serrano avenue will be erected a garage, 100x300 feet, built of concrete and having capacity to house fifty machines. The dressing rooms on the comedy site will be increased by fifty in one building adjoining Stage No. 2, on the East lot, and there will be fifty new dressing rooms adjoining the new No. 4 stage.

A great increase in electric power is contemplated, the first of the three new 300-kilowatt generators being now in operation. A new underground system, embracing a mile of conduits, connects the two lots and provides for the eventual elimination of all alternating currents.

Still another improvement is the installation of a steam heating plant in the main building. The grass plots on Western avenue and Sunset boulevard are to be planted with flowers, and in general the entire aspect of the entire studio is to be improved.

J. Parker Read's Big Tie-Up

EXTENDING the benefits of his press department to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, J. Parker Read, Jr., now a member of the Associated Producers, who has four productions released by Hodkinson, has launched through Sig Schlager, his representative in charge of advertising and publicity, in big campaign of picture promotion. In addition to a tieup with 414 newspapers boosting "Sex," "Sahara" and "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" specifically and "Love Madness" incidentally, J. Parker Read, Jr. intends to prepare an impressive advertising plan which will make known to the trade directly the scope and value of this propaganda.

A program of double-page, and page ads and a number of "teaser" ads will convey to the exhibitor the news that some of the biggest newspapers in the United States, whose cooperation was obtained directly by the Read Productions Press Bureau and nearly 400 other journals of wide circulation, served by the Newspaper Enterprise Association, have launched a $5,000 Scenario Contest calculated to interest the American public in writing original stories suitable for Louise Glaum, whose latest vehicle, "Love," will be J. Parker Read, Jr.'s next release through Associated Producers, Inc.

The contest is nation-wide. Producer Read has offered $2,500 for a first-prize scenario for his star; with $1,500 and $1,000, respectively, for second and third awards and with the proviso that he may purchase additional ideas at $1,000 each, which considerably adds to the financial inducement from the national viewpoint.

The Newspaper Enterprise Association, it is stated, has arranged with its clientele to provide 150 columns of motion picture material, created by the J. Parker Read, Jr. Productions Press Bureau, for publication during the first 40 days of the competition, which is scheduled to operate at least sixty days.

The total circulation of the Newspaper Enterprise clientele alone is estimated at 6,500,000 while other mediums bring this circulation up to the 10,000,000 mark.

One hundred and fifty columns for forty days in each newspaper present a staggering total of 60,000 columns of newspaper space, valued, in advertising rates, conservatively at $3,500,000 according to estimates.

This latest Benjamin B. Hampton production written by Upton Sinclair contains the kind of action and general atmosphere of excitement that appeals to a pretty large majority of picture patrons despite the fact that its theme will not find favor among a more refined or genteel audience. Its oriental environment with its story of opium, white slave traffic and the "men higher up," who know about it but are well paid for their silence all find their way into "The Money-Changers."

The actual story material is not entirely new to the screen but it furnishes a new thrill and together with some very fine acting, the production measures up and even surpasses to a certain extent, previous production of this character. The main reason for this, outside of the fact that the production end of it has been well taken care of, is the fine acting by practically the entire cast. Edward Peil as Ling Choo Fang gives a very creditable performance throughout the picture and especially in one sort of "Broken Blossoms" touch in which he idolizes a young white girl who is a white slave victim. Robert McKim is a real villainous-creature and Roy Stewart contributes a good bit as an enterprising young reporter

SYNOPSIS.

Hugh Gordon, proprietor of a drug corporation, engages in illicit "dope" selling, having his headquarters in a Chinatown den. His fiancee, Lucy Hegan, knows nothing of Gordon's illegitimate trade and spends much of her time in settlement work. Allan Martin, reporter, is assigned to trace the dealers in dope, meets and falls in love with Lucy. He becomes acquainted with Monk Mullen, ex-convict, who is in love with Maggie O'Brien, employed at the settlement house. Maggie wishes to find her lost sister, Mary, who is in Gordon's Chinese den. Monk reveals Gordon's identity to Martin. The latter leads a raid on Gordon's lair, Lucy and Mary are rescued and Gordon killed by Ling Fang, a hatchetman.

Admirers of strong melodrama with intensely realistic underworld settings will find "The Money Changers" much to their taste. It is a remarkably well-directed feature, brimful of thrills, and its colorful Chinatown atmosphere, forceful action and numerous moments of breathless suspense combine to make it an exceptionally interesting production of its kind. The plot swings through a medley of bizarre happenings up to a crashing climax and there isn't a single let-up in its activity. Exhibitors should find this a welcome attraction.

Points of Appeal—The free-for-all fight which brings the story to a conclusion is admirably staged, the picture is rich in stirring incident from start to finish and its dramatic tension never slackens

Cast—An all-star aggregation of players is in evidence. Excellent characterizations are given by Claire Adams, Robert McKim, Roy Stewart, George Webb, Betty Brice and the underworld types are wonderfully true to life.

Photography and Lighting—The picture is remarkable for its diversity of views, the Chinese dens, the crook's gathering quarters, the newspaper office, the society scenes are all beautifully filmed, artistic long shots abound and faultless lighting governs the entire production:

Direction—The continuity is perfectly maintained throughout and smooth, rapid action prevails.

AN INTENSELY INTERESTING DRAMATIC OFFERING

Lucy Hegan	Claire Adams
Allan Martin	Roy Stewart
Hugh Gordon	Robert McKim
Mary Holmes	Audrey Chapman
Ling Choo Fang	Edward Peil

This is an offering that should strike the picture-going fans with a bang. It is intensely absorbing, swift with action, and lavishly produced. The scenes swing from a magnificent drawing room in a Fifth Avenue home, to a Settlement House in the slums, from there to a Chinese opium den, and thence to an apartment furnished with almost garish luxury—yet in the heart of the worst slums of a big city. The cast is very large and every member of it is well-known to fans; and each acquits himself or herself with honors.

The story is too long, and too complicated to outline in the brief space available; suffice it to say that the story is convincing, logical, and that the interest never drops for a moment.

It is melodramatic—but different from a number of melodramas in that it does not insult the intelligence of the adult theatre-goer. The main plot deals with the efforts of a newspaper reporter to bring to justice a gang of "dope-peddlers"—and who discovers that the leader of this gang is engaged to the girl the reporter loves; there is a sub-plot in which Ling Choo Fang, a Chinese hatchet-man, loves a white girl, the mistress of the leader of the dope-peddlers. Ultimately, the hatchet man avenges the shame of "Little White Plum Blossom."

"The Money-Changers" Six-Part Melodramatic Production of Colorful Appeal Released by Pathe

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy

Anyone who likes melodrama of the underworld, pictured in its most attractive form, will be certain to enjoy this six-ree Pathe release, entitled "The Money-Changers." It is based on one of the stories of Upton Sinclair and produced by Benjamin B. Hampton, with Jack Conway directing. It moves with authority through many diverse phases of underworld life, ranging from garish Chinese dens to crooks' headquarters, settlement house and wine room scenes. Views are also taken in a newspaper office, and some society scenes are thrown in by way of contrast.

The settings at times border on the sumptuous, and though many of the situations have been used in previous dramas of a similar type, this is a production that holds the attention closely. The continuity is broken at times to admit enjoyable comedy touches, which include a few burlesque scenes taken from an amateur performance of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." All this is admissible and welcome in a production of this kind.

A notable feature is the excellence of the characterizations, Roy Stewart playing the hero, Robert McKim the villain, George Webb an underworld type, Claire Adams the heroine, and Edward Peil doing a notable bit as Ling Choo Fang, the hatchetman.

As a whole the production is colorful, moves with sufficiently good action, has some highly interesting moments, and winds up with a smashing climax.

Interest In New Talmadge—First National Contract

Congratulatory Letters and Wires Evince Great Interest of Industry

GREAT interest among independent exhibitors and the industry at large in the announcement extension of the Norma and Constance Talmadge-Schenck-Associated First National agreement for a further term of three years with approximately a year of the original First National contract yet to run, is evidenced by the unprecedented number of telegrams and letters of congratulations reported received at the Joseph M. Schenck offices and those of Associated First National.

The marked popularity of the Talmadge sisters with motion picture patrons and the advantage accruing to independent exhibitors through the affiliation of the two stars with Associated First National are among the points emphasized in the various congratulatory messages received, it is announced. The following are typical of many telegrams to hand:

Thomas Saxe, of Milwaukee, in a wire to Norma Talmadge and her sister says:

"Please accept heartiest congratulations upon signing of new contract with Associated First National. I am more than pleased at having the opportunity of exhibiting your worthwhile productions in all my theatres."

F. C. Smoot, of the Smoot Amusement Company, Parkersburg, wired Mr. Schenck:

"All independent exhibitors are to be congratulated upon your foresight in consummating the new contract. No stronger affiliation could be made."

"Congratulations on renewing contract with Associated First National," wires W. M. Sauvage, of the Sauvage Amusement Enterprises from Alton, Ills. "We feel like using extended publicity now on the Talmadge stars with contracts signed. Exhibitors lose confidence in stars who are constantly changing their releasing organizations."

The strengthening of the principle of co-operation between independent stars and producers and independent exhibitors is the underlying thought in the message sent to Mr. Schenck by Sigmund Schlinger, of the Grand theatre, Middletown, Conn., who wires: "It gives me the greatest pleasure to learn that you have renewed the contracts of Norma and Constance Talmadge for three more years after the expiration of their present agreement. As a member of an organization of independent exhibitors I consider this a high tribute to Associated First National. There is no question in my mind that through this affiliation there will ultimately result the one thing exhibitors have been yearning for—one for all and all for one. Congratulations."

"Norma and Constance always great stars from both artistic and box office standpoint. The linking of Associated First National with these girls' name is all that any exhibitor could ask," is the message from the Liberty theatre, Marysville, Kansas, while A. T. Andrews, of Emporia, Pa., says: "The best news I have had in months. Congratulations Mr. Schenck on your good judgment." In his telegram to Constance Talmadge J. von Herberg, of Seattle, is in notable vein. He wires: "With the Perfect Woman and The Love Expert on the First National list for the next four years no further Good References will be required. It would certainly have been Dangerous Business to try to get along without Norma and yourself."

"Independent exhibitors composing Associated First National franchise holders are proud of Mr. Schenck and the two world's greatest actresses. Congratulations on your sound business judgment," wires W. MacIntire, Rose theatre, Fayetteville, N. C., to Mr. Schenck; while the Strand Amusement Company, of Canton, N. C., telegraphs: "We are proud to be a member of an institution that has a man of your ability and such capable stars associated with it.'"

"Now that the Talmadge sisters have signed a three-year contract to continue their release through Associated First National," runs a statement from the Joseph M. Schenck offices, "at the most remarkable figures on record in the industry, Joseph M. Schenck has decided to give his stars bigger and more elaborate productions than ever before, and will concentrate chiefly on well known novels and successful Broadway plays which have enjoyed long and successful runs in the biggest cities throughout the country. In pursuance of this policy, some of the superfeatures in which Norma will appear are: 'The Sign on the Door,' by Channing Pollock, the stage version played in New York by Mary Ryan, and afterwards by Majorie Rambeau, with two companies now on the road; 'Smiling Through,' by Allen Langdon Martin, in which Jane Cowl starred and is still playing on tour; 'The Passion Flower' (La Marguerita), by Jacinto Benavente, the English version of which is by John C. Underhill and in which Nance O'Neill created the leading role; 'The Garden of Allah.' the most famous of all Robert Hitchens' books, the screen production of which will be actually made in the Orient, and 'The Net,' a three-act drama by Maravene Thompson, which was adapted by her from her book, entitled, 'The Woman's Law.'"

Constance Talmadge will also have several well known plays, including Salisbury Field's delightful comedy, "Wedding Bells," and Hoyt's "The Contented Woman." Negotiations are now under way for several other comedies, which have played to capacity Broadway audiences. Following the play, "The Man from Toronto,' on which Constance is now engaged, Mr. Schenck will present her in an original story, "A Butterfly in Harness," especially written for Constance by Frederick and Fanny Hatton.

The best of directors, the biggest productions, and the most interesting dramas and cleverest comedies, regardless of cost, will be identified with the Talmadge sisters, wherever their films are shown under the First National banner."

Remarkable Views of New York

Scenes Are Shot from Plane While Looping the Loop

SENSATIONAL views have been a feature of those issues of Pathe News already issued in connection with the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the topical reel's existence in this country. Pathe News No. 95, which was released on Saturday, November 27th, offers a series of aeroplane "shots," which, according to Pathe, will "electrify" audiences viewing it. It is a series of views taken over New York City from an aeroplane, while the machine was looping-the-loop over some of the tall buildings on Manhattan. The filming of these views for Pathe News No. 95 has been made the subject of a lengthy report from the home-office of the Pathe organization. The Pathe statement follows in part:

"In the hunt for 'thrills,' Emanuel Cohen, editor of the Pathe News, has been obliged to go to extremes, for 'stunts' that are new are scarce indeed, these days.

"In the story arranged for issue No. 95, the Pathe News first presents New York as it is seen from the air. Following comes the first short views of New York, as it begins to spin around while the plane is making the initial evolution in the loop. The third part of the story gives in most thrilling fashion the full presentation of the city as it swings around the heads of the aviators and all laws of gravitation are upset. A distant shot shows the aeroplane performing its thrilling commission for the first offering of the sensations of a looping-pilot ever filmed over New York.

"One does ont have to be an aviator to experience the sensation of such a performance. All those who see Pathe News No. 95, will not lack a single feeling that an aviator gets while looping above the Metropolis.

"The business of getting new thrills into his pictures has rightfully, but not officially, brought to the editor of the Pathe News the designation of 'the thrill maker,' for in effect that is the berth he holds. Staging stunts is one of his principal duties, in addition to keeping his fingers on the pictorial news pulse of the world.

"When it became apparent to the Pathe News editor that he would have difficulty in getting an unusual picture for each issue of the topical reel during its anniversary celebration, he placed the predicament before his entire staff, and implored their aid.

J. R. Johnson, stationed at San Francisco, and one of the best news cameramen in the country, "framed up" a special that was as thrilling as it was interesting. His own story of the event is as follows:

"A speedboat race had never been covered from the air, so there was my new angle. Through the good offices of the Goodyear Rubber Company I was permitted to use their 'Pony Blimp,' the smallest dirigible balloon in existence, and after a thirty-mile spin through the air I arrived over the race course. Although the balloon provided some novel as well as beautiful scenes, the motor boats were much faster and the gas bag could not keep up with them; neither could it fly close to them without the danger of colliding with harbor craft. Alas, I realized that my picture would lack the element of thrill necessary to 'put it over.'

"The race being run in three heats of 24 miles each, I secured a hydro-airplane for the second heat, fastening my tripod away forward on the deck of the flying boat. By tying myself to a strut, I was enabled to stand up in front of the pilot and operate the camera without falling off. We would start at an altitude of about 600 feet, then swoop down on the speed boats so close that the man in the boat could almost touch us. This furnished the thrill element. The third heat provided an opportunity to make scenes from below which rounded out the picture."

Luke McLuke Is Popular

Numerous enthusiastic and favorable reports have been received from the many Pioneer exchanges scattered throughout the United States and Canada, which tell the story of how Luke McLuke's Film-Osophy creates uproars of laughter in all sorts of theatres in large and small cities, according to an announcement of Pioneer home office.

Nazimova Release Due Dec. 6th

Takes Part of Russian Princess; Charles Bryant in Lead

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION has scheduled the release of "Billions," Nazimova's most recent starring vehicle, for December 6.

This adaptation from a celebrated French drama follows close on the heels of "Madame Peacock," in which Nazimova acquitted herself creditably as the fickle, fame-loving actress who deserts husband and child, only to receive the great shock of her life in having her own daughter as her stage rival.

"Billions" is the romance of a Russian princess and a Washington Square poet wherein billions are lost and a world of love is won. Besides having the tang of Greenwich Village and the luxury of the Russia of Czardom, it pictures the high life of the exclusive winter resorts of California.

Nazimova has the part of the Princess Triloff, widowed when her husband is assassinated in Russia. She loves a poet whose verses she has read but whom she has never seen. A plot is set afoot by a crook and his girl confederate to blackmail the poet who has inherited many millions. At the risk of losing her own reputation, the Princess, overhearing the conspiracy, deliberately gets into a compromising situation; but her presence saves the poet from being held up for "hush money."

"Billions" was adapted from a French stage success. Charles Bryant, who by the way, is also Nazimova's leading man, scenarioized it. According to advance reports he does splendidly in the picture, drawing his role with a nice sense of contrasts. Others who perform in the capable supporting cast are William J. Irving, Victor Potel, John Steppling, Marian Skinner, Bonnie Hill, Emmett King and Eugene H. Klum.

This picture makes use of unusual and fanciful sets, all of which have been designed under Nazimova's personal supervision. Simplicity, however, has been the keynote, even where the bizarre was sought. One of the striking sets is a scene in a street of old Russia, showing several hundred mounted Cossacks riding amid a mob in front of the Czar's palace, and near the Greek Cathedral. Another suggests luxury and unlimited wealth, while a garden of dreams visualizing the usually inarticulate mental operations of a sleeper, is the product of great ingenuity, Metro states.

Persons who have viewed this picture in its private showings say that Nazimova does supreme acting. But it goes without saying that Nazimova need only be given a part to be played, and she will, by her extraordinary art, become the character with such realism as to remove from the minds of those observing the performance all sense of her merely acting it.

In the course of her several screen productions, the Russian star, who has 300 stage productions to her credit, has been especially successful in two distinct characterizations: the ingenuous, artless girl, winning success through her very simplicity and sincerity, and the celebrity, the woman of international note and distinction.

Along these lines were "The Brat," where Nazimova was the ragged doughty little chorus girl; "Stronger than Death," where she played on the screen so superbly as Sigrid Fersen, dancer of world fame, a highly finished product of European civilization; "Madame Peacock," as the woman who becomes a dazzling actress. In "Billions," again the star is a wealthy Russian aristocrat.

Neilan's Plans for Next Year

Increased Activities Promised During Next 12 Months

WITH the close of a successful year not far off, Marshall Neilan announces several ambitious enterprises for the coming twelve months. Activities at the Neilan studio in Hollywood will be materially increased with the advent of 1921, it is announced. Various new affiliations with authors and others are expected to open new channels for this director, and a number of important additions to the personnel of the organization will shortly be announced.

Soon after the first of January work will be commenced on a picturization of Booth Tarkington's famous "Penrod," which has had success, both as a book and a play. In the title role will be Wesley Barry, who played the star part of "Dinty." This story, it is planned, will be produced in the New England locale around which it is written.

Another story to be staged in the early part of the next year is Albert Payson Terhune's work, "The Lotus Eater." Playing a big part in this story will be Irene Marcellus, recently "discovered" in a popular New York roof show by Mr. Neilan.

Both Wesley Barry and Irene Marcellus will be seen in other Neilan productions during the coming year.

Marjorie Daw, Colleen Moore and Pat O'Malley are among the others who will figure prominently in the casts of photoplays from this studio in 1921.

Mr. Neilan's renewed affiliation with Marion Fairfax, playwright, author and scenario editor, is expected to result in greater achievements in future Marshall Neilan productions. Miss Fairfax has been responsible for the scenarios of all the Neilan successes of the past year. Under her new arrangement with Mr. Neilan, Miss Fairfax will later present, in collaboration with the young producer, a new type of photoplay to be known as Marion Fairfax Productions.

The art direction will continue under the supervision of Ben Carre, the noted Frenchman, who did the work in all of the 1920 Neilan pictures.

Jack Voshell, director of various well-known attractions, in the capacity of co-director with Mr. Neilan, is another important factor, as is Tom Held, Mr. Neilan's assistant since the inception of the organization. Others in the producing department who will continue in important executive capacities are D. J. Gray, film editor and manager of the cutting department; William Linahan, in charge of electrical effects, and Lucita Squier, chief continuity clerk.

In charge of the business end of Marshall Neilan Productions and the West Coast studios is L. L. Baxter, who recently joined the company following a similar affiliation with Douglas Fairbanks.

At the head of the publicity and advertisement department, Pete Smith will enlarge the activities of his branch of the company in the exploitation of the Neilan product and the personages connected with its creation. Bill Horwitz, head of the still department, promises innovations in photographic arts and exploitation material.

In New York, J. R. Grainger, will continue in charge of Mr. Neilan's affairs in the East. Mr. Grainger's office is always at the disposal of visiting exhibitors and some of the most prominent showmen of the country make this place their headquarters when in New York.

In England, Harry Ham looks after Mr. Neilan's foreign affairs. The work of Mr. Ham abroad has done much to add to the prestige of Marshall Neilan Productions there.

Other acquisitions of importance are new being planned, both to the producing and the business organizations of Mr. Neilan's company. Various well known names are to be identified with that of Marshall Neilan during the coming year. The present releasing arrangement through Associated First National Pictures, Inc., continues as in the past.

Fox News Cameramen at Scene of Riot

By quick action and disregard for danger, Fox News secured pictures of the Thanksgiving Day riot in New York on Fifth avenue, when 5,000 sympathizers of the Irish cause stormed the Union Club building on the avenue to tear down the British flag.

Three Fox News cameramen were on the scenes before the police reserves. The film shows the stones being hurled through the club windows, and the most exciting moments of the struggle between mob and police are pictured. The early arrival of the cameramen enabled them to train their lenses upon the police reserves as they came up. The first clash with the crowd, in which women were prominent, is graphically shown as well as the later work of the police in quelling the disturbance.

Sidney Franklin Buys Soutar's "Courage"

Sidney Franklin has just received word from Jos. M. Schenck that the latter has concluded negotiations for the film rights to Andrew Soutar's dramatic story, "Courage." Together with Albert Kaufman, who sponsors the independent productions directed by him Mr. Franklin has been bidding for the Soutar story for some time. It will be his second independent production for Associated First National release. "Parrot and Company," his initial effort, was completed this week.

The acquisition of this widely read story by Franklin marks the second to be secured by a First National producer from Soutar in as many weeks. Jos. M. Schenck also secured the rights to "On Principal," which will be filmed under the title "Satan's Paradise" with Norma Talmadge as the star.

Elinor Glyn Completes Story for Swanson

Mrs. Elinor Glyn has finished a story for the screen entitled "A Sheltered Daughter," in which Miss Swanson will be featured, and both Mr. Lasky and Miss Swanson are enthusiastic over it.

Presumably after appearing in Cecil B. DeMille's next production based upon "The Affairs of Anatol," which is to have an all-star cast, Miss Swanson will start work upon Mrs. Glyn's story, and the latter will supervise many of the scenes which will take place in the most colorful locations in the gay capitals of the old world.

"Dead Men Tell No Tales," the Vitagraph special production based on the story by E. W. Hornung, will have its initial New York presentation at the Broadway theatre, the engagement of one week beginning this coming Monday. Although this picture has been shown privately on a few occasions at the Vitagraph exchange, this will be the first performance for the general public.

"Passion" Booked for Capitol

"PASSION," the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., special production starring Pola Negri, the famous continental star, is to have its premier in New York at the Capitol theatre. It will open there Sunday, December 12th.

Three things in connection with this production make its premier among the biggest events which have taken place in the theatrical world for some time, declares First National. It is the first film of any pretensions to be imported from Europe since the war, and in it the film industry in this country will find the answer as to whether Europe took up production where it was dropped in 1914 at the outbreak of the world war, or if producers there have been able to bridge the six year gap, and begin on a par with American production in 1920.

The film also marks the debut of Pola Negri as a star and Ernst Lubitsch as a director in America. Miss Negri is hailed by critics as being equal, if not superior to any emotional actress in the world. The interest in Mr. Lubitsch is scarcely secondary to that felt in regard to Miss Negri. He has been hailed as "the Griffith of Europe" more because of his daring methods of accomplishing effects, than for the resemblance of his productions to those of Griffith, state First National officials. He has always aimed at the dramatic and spectacular, and his handling of some of the scenes in "Passion" in which as many as 5,000 people were used, is said to transcend anything that has ever been attempted in this country, it is declared.

The third point which has aroused interest in the premier is the unanimity with which critics who have seen the production have hailed it as an epoch-making production. Probably the greatest compliment, however, that as been paid the production is its inclusion in the first four "Exceptional Photoplays" selected by the committee on critique of the National Board of Review. This committee, giving its reasons for the selection of "Passion," says in part:

"It is very gratifying to find that this first foreign picture of importance shown in this country since the war sets a standard of which our best producers may well be envious. Mr. Ernst Lubitsch working with an international cast and with the palaces of Europe to choose from for his settings, has achieved an excellence in this type of screen spectacle which will not be easily surpassed. The appointments of the interiors are made with a care that will bring delight to the student of the Louis XV period of decoration, while the formal garden exteriors that represent Versailles recall the works of Watteau.

"When the story plunges into the events of the French Revolution, Mr. Lubitsch shows a skill in crowd composition and the dramatic clash of massed groups which proves that he knows how to get his effects without overlooking his scene. He achieves a maximum effect with an economy of means which never leads him into exaggeration. In this part of the picture he has hurried history along a little too fast by putting the Revolution immediately after the exile of Madame Du Barry and entirely omitting the reign of Louis XVI. But he is artistically justified in this because he purposes to show to how great an extent the dissoluteness of the court mistresses helped to bring about the French Revolution. And he may also have had in mind that the story of Marie Antoinette is too good a film to lose by treating it as a mere incident.

"But all of Mr. Lubitsch's skill would not have sufficed to make this an exceptional picture if he had not been able to depend upon his actors. The cast is headed by Pola Negri, an actress of great reputation abroad, who looks rather like Geraldine Farrar must have looked at the beginning of her career. The role of Du Barry is presented with fire and imagination. But Pola Negri is only one of many. The part of Louis XV is superbly played as is also that of the Duke of Choiseul, not to mention Armand the lover, and Count Du Barry. We do not remember ever having seen a cast of such a high average of talent."

Educationals Hit B'way

Three Popular Two-Reel Laugh-Makers Invade Big Theatres

THE two-reel comedies released through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., are rivalling each other in popular appeal at three Broadway theatres this week. This is the third time that this record for comedies has been set by Broadway theatres and each time it has been with pictures from this same releasing organization.

"A Tray Full of Trouble," latest of the Chester Comedies, featuring Snooky the Humanzee, is at the Rialto this week after having played the preceding week at the Rivoli. The Chester Comedies are the only pictures that have uniformly played both theatres. This started with "Four Times Foiled," the initial release, which was shown at the Rivoli first and then a couple of weeks later. Since then all these comedies have played consecutive weeks at the two houses.

"April Fool," latest of the Mermaid Comedies, starring Lloyd Hamilton, is the fun relief at the Strand. In "April Fool" Hamilton is said to have an even stronger part than in "The Simp."

"The Simp," the preceding Hamilton picture, is at the Brooklyn Strand this week.

The Rivoli theatre this week is showing "A Homespun Hero," a two-reel Christie Comedy. At the Criterion "South Sea Magic" and the "Hula Hula Theatre" continue to be an important portion of the program, during the run of "Idols of Clay."

"Swat the Landlord," Chester Outing, is also on the program at the Strand this week.

Metro Gets "Outside" Film

Roland West's "The Silver Lining" Will Be Distributed Through Metro

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, announces that the company has obtained for exclusive distribution the Roland West Production, "The Silver Lining," starring the beautiful Jewel Carmen. The picture was made by the Iroquois Film Corporation. It is a super-feature of six reels, written and directed by Mr. West.

With its elaborate distributing system both in this country and abroad, Metro from time to time accepts independently made pictures in addition to its own specials for release, the most notable recently having been the Maurice Tourneur super production of "The Great Redeemer," by H. H. Van Loan.

In the notable cast of "The Silver Lining," in addition to the attractive Jewel Carmen, are many Broadway stage favorites. They include Virginia Valli, Arthur Donaldson, Leslie Austen, Julia Swayne Gordon, J. Herbert Frank and Gladden James. The well-known feature dancers, Dorothy Dickson and Carl Hyson, add the lustre of some of their artistic interpretations to the Southern cabaret scenes of the picture.

Roland West, author and director of "The Silver Lining," used a scenario prepared by D. J. Buchanan and Charles H. Smith. The motion photography was done by Edward Wynard and Frank Zucker, with special art settings and effects by Charles O. Seessel.

According to present plans Metro will release "The Silver Lining" shortly after the beginning of the new year.

Blanche Sweet in Fine Role

Montana Frontier Story Furnishes Vehicle; Robert Thornby Directing

BLANCHE SWEET'S next appearance under the Pathe banner will be made in the Jesse D. Hampton production of Marah Ellis Ryan's novel, "That Girl Montana," a melodrama of frontier life. The screen adaptation was written by George H. Plympton, and the production directed by Robert Thornby.

Mahlon Hamilton has the leading male role in "That Girl Montana," playing opposite Miss Sweet in the character of Dan Overton. In the supporting cast are: Edward Peil, Charles Edler, Frank Lanning, Kate Price, Jack Roseleigh and Clair Du Brey appear. Lucien Andriot was in charge of the camera work.

"That Girl Montana" is a story of life in Montana during the most picturesque days of its history. In the character portrayed by Miss Sweet the picture presents a girl in the environment of a land that formed the frontier, the scene of cattle wars, gold stampedes and outlaws. Around the rugged characters engendered by such an environment, the author has written a story of colorful incident, and one that proved itself admirably suited to the requirements of the photoplay.

The play opens with a scene that was a commonplace among the happenings of those days in Montana. A stagecoach hold-up occupies the center of the screen, and the rough character who orders "hands up" is insensible to the pleas of the poorly-clad boy, whom he commands to rifle the women of the part. The "boy" is a "girl," and this last offense by her father drives her from him to a home with an Indian trio. In later years these shadows of the past loom up over her promised happiness as the wife of Dan Overton, one of a few honest men among the crowd of outlaws who inhabit that part of the country.

Big Tie-Up for "Kismet"

Emerson Phonograph Company Will Advertise Picture with Records

A COUNTRY-WIDE tie-up has been consummated for Robertson-Cole's production of Otis Skinner in "Kismet." The tie-up has been made through the Emerson Phonograph Company and its distributors and agencies, who will advertise the Robertson-Cole picture in conjunction with the Emerson Phonograph record, "Kismet." This is a song and Arabian fox-trot written by two well-known vaudevillians, Herschel Henlere and Guido Diero, and now being extensively used in vaudeville, declares Robertson-Cole.

The song was written several months ago and published by Will Rossiter. It was already on the market when James C. Bradford set the music for the Otis Skinner picture, and Mr. Bradford seized on it for one of the themes of the production. When Rossiter heard of this he made a new cover of the number and used two very fine pictures of the production.

The Rossiter publication had already been accepted by all the phonograph firms, it is stated, and either as a vocal or instrumental number had been recorded on the Pathe, Victor, Edison, Columbia, Emerson and Gennett records, as well as on the Star Music rolls.

The announcement from the Emerson Phonograph Company that it has completed the arrangements for its nation wide campaign will undoubtedly be followed by the other companies. The Emerson Company, in addition to notifying its various agencies and requesting them to give co-operation whenever "Kismet" is shown in the towns covered by its six thousand-odd agencies, has supplied each agency with a large window sticker, calling attention to both the motion picture and the phonograph record.

When an exhibitor books "Kismet," all he has to do is to notify the Emerson agency in his particular town, and he can be assured of every co-operation for window displays, etc., from these phonograph stores, declares Robertson-Cole. In New York, the main Emerson store set the pace by using two of the Otis Skinner oil paintings in its windows and distributing oil paintings and lobby display pictures throughout their principal New York agencies.

Reginald Barker in Canada

Other Goldwyn Units Reported to Be Busy in West on New Products

THE Goldwyn Company, which is making the picture from Katherine Newlin Burt's new story now running serially in the Red Book Magazine, will soon leave for Canada to take exteriors. Reginald Barker is directing this picture which went into production under the working title of "Snow Blindness." The dramatic story unfolded in the novel takes place in the Canadian North woods and will give the director a chance for some beautiful photographic effects. Russell Simpson heads the all-star cast. Others in the company are Mary Alden, Cullen Landis and Pauline Starke.

Will Rogers has finished work on his new picture, "Boys Will Be Boys," from Irvin S. Cobb's famous story, which was directed by Clarence Badger.

Rupert Hughes, one of the Goldwyn-Rex Beach Eminent Authors, has arrived in Los Angeles, with his wife and daughter, to spend the winter in the study of screen technique. Mr. Hughes' first original screen story, which bears the working title of "Mr. and Miserable Jones," is now in production under the direction of E. Mason Hopper.

Supporting Tom Moore in his next stellar vehicle, "Mr. Barnes of New York," from the novel and play of the same title by Archibald Clavering Gunter, will be Naomi Childers, who played the lead with him in "Hold Your Horses," a Rupert Hughes' picture not yet released, and appeared in "Eartbound," Anna Lehr, Sydney Ainsworth, Otto Hoffman, Kate Lester and Louis Willoughby. The picture went into production on Friday last under the direction of Victor Schertzinger.

Mobs of real Chinese have been much in evidence in the Goldwyn studios the past week. They were used in the mob scenes of "The Water Lily," Gouverneur Morris' first story written directly for the screen, which is being produced under the direction of Frank Lloyd.

John Morosco Watches Meighan at Work

In conjunction with the idea of Tom J. Geraghty, Production Editor of the Eastern Studio of Paramount Pictures to co-operate with all persons directly associated with any story being picturized by Paramount, John Morosco, author of "The Quarry," Thomas Meighan's forthcoming picture, visited the Long Island City studio recently and watched Mr. Meighan work. He also saw all takes of the picture run in the projection room and expressed himself as remarkably well pleased with the results.

Mr. Morosco paid Mr. Meighan the unusual compliment of declaring that he would be the greatest actor of the time. He said that Mr. Meighan is only beginning in the achievements that will be his in the acting profession. As Jim Montgomery, the convict hero of his story, he believes he has the strongest role of his career.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces that the widespread demand for "Earthbound" being registered in England has caused its London branch, the Goldwyn Pictures, Ltd., to cable a request for the immediate delivery of enough prints of this production to cover the British Isles. According to customary procedure, "Earthbound" would not be distributed in the English market until 1922, but in the present case precedents have been set aside to secure immediate screening of this picture which was released to the American market only a short time ago.

The success being scored by the picture during its run at the Covent Garden Royal Opera House in London is said to have caused a sensation among English motion picture men. Recognizing the phenomenal appeal of the picture, they have besieged the London office with requests for prints, it is stated.

Fox Special Opens at Springfield, Mass.

A pre-release showing of the William Fox super-special production of modern life, "The Face at Your Window," was given at the Fox theatre, Springfield, Mass., October 25, beginning a week's run. The picture scored an instantaneous success, before one of the largest and most enthusiastic audiences that ever attended a motion picture showing in that city, declares William Fox.

De Casseres Finishing First Screen Story

The first original story of Benjamin De Casseres for Paramount is awaited with interest by his large following of newspaper readers. For years Mr. De Casseres was an interesting figure in the newspaper world, his work appearing at first in the New York Sun and later in the New York Times.

Leaders Displaced in Campaign

Pathe's Serial Dept. Lands Big Business in Closing Days

A STATEMENT from the New York headquarters of the Pathe organization gives the general condition found in the closing days of the "Pearson Month" contest. The winners, however, are not definitely announced in this report. The race is described to be a very close one, and the actual victors for first honors are reported to be still in doubt. The business of the serial department, especially, is said to have attained tremendous strides in the closing days of November, and to have changed the standing of the candidates considerably. The Pathe statement follows:

"The stretch has been reached in the Pathe salesmanship contest for $10,000 in money awards, to be divided by the winning branches in the four districts competing in the 'Pearson Month' contest.

"With the closing on Saturday, November 27, only two more business days remained before the ending of the contest at midnight, November 30.

"While not disclosing the identity of the leaders at the end of the fourth week of the contest, Pathe goes as far as to state that three of the branches which had been leading at the end of the third week, had been displaced.

"In the rush of new business and collections assembled in the final drive down the stretch, there have been many changes in the standings of the rival branches. However, so close is the race that it is most probable the winner will not be known until every contract obtained before midnight, November 30, has reached the Home Office and been tallied.

The inimitable Harold Lloyd is back again in "Number Please," his latest comedy for Pathe

"Tremendous business recorded by the serial department had considerable to do with the kaleidoscopic changes in the contest standing during the fourth week. Many records have been swept away in th tidal wave of contracts recorded by the chapter plays department, with bookings on 'Velvet Fingers,' 'Ruth of the Rockies' and 'The Phantom Foe,' the current releases, setting the pace.

"From a compilation of the figures in the various districts into which the country has been divided for this contest, it is clearly apparent that business conditions must have met with a turn for the better. It was indicated during the third week, that improvement was sure to be noted in those territories where conditions because of economic adjustments, were not as flourishing as six months ago. This fact became even more clearly defined during the fourth week, when the Southern Central New England branches returned remarkable figures in new business and collections.

"It will be fully ten days if not longer after the closing date before the winners in 'Pearson Month' contest will be definitely known, owing to the usual rush of last-minute business.

"Several things in connection with the affairs of Pathe Exchange, Inc., have been definitely established during this competition. One, that the serial continues to increase in popularity; second, that short subjects are steadily growing in the favor of exhibitors, who more and more are seeing their value to a motion picture program! and, third, that the Pathe policy of releasing no features except those possessing a definite box-office value, has the hearty indorsement of exhibitors throughout the country. These conclusions are reached after an analysis of business in all selling divisions of the Pathe organization."

Current Paramount Releases

Fitzmaurice Feature and Dalton Vehicle Issued Nov. 28th

THE new George Fitzmaurice production, "Idols of Clay," was scheduled for Paramount release, November 28. On the same day also was released Dorothy Dalton in "A Romantic Adventuress."

The story of "Idols of Clay," a romance of two widely divergent worlds, was written by Ouida Bergere, and no expense was spared in making it one of the most lavish and spectacular pictures of the current season, declares a statement from Paramount headquarters. As in the previous Fitzmaurice special productions for Paramount, Mae Murray and David Powell are featured in the leading roles.

Miss Bergere's story brings together on a South Sea Island a young English sculptor who, his faith in his career and in mankind shattered by an unscrupulous woman, has drifted to the tropics, and an innocent child of nature, the daughter of a pearl smuggler. The girl falls in love with the handsome stranger. Later events lead to their separation, but finally, after the girl of the South Seas has experienced the dizzy heights of London Bohemian society and the shadowy dens of the Limehouse underworld, they are re-united.

The picture records one step more in the development of Miss Murray from ingenue dancing roles to those of a finished emotional actress, says Paramount. The former Follies favorite has made rapid strides under Mr. Fitzmaurice's direction.

The cast which surrounds the featured players includes George Fawcett, Claude King, Leslie King, Dorothy Cumming and Richard Wangermann.

"A Romantic Adventuress," is declared by Famous Players to be a swift-moving story full of dramatic moments, sparkling humor and plenty of eye-filling and spectacular scenes.

This picture is an adaptation of Charles Belmont Davis's story, "A Winter City Favorite," and the scenario was written by Rosina Henley, who also wrote the continuity of "Guilty of Love," a previous Dorothy Dalton picture. The director was Harley Knoles.

Miss Dalton's leading man is Charles Meredith, and Howard Long, Augusta Anderson, Ivo Dawson and Robert Schable are also prominent in the cast.

"Idle Hands" to Be Next Pioneer Release

"Idle Hands," starring Gail Kane, J. Herbert Frank and Thurston Hall, will be the next important release of the Pioneer Film Corporation, according to an announcement made yesterday by President A. E. Lefcourt.

This production, with this all-star cast, comes from the Park-Whiteside studios, and is characterized as one of the biggest features this concern has ever produced.

Christie Finishes Two for Educational

"Movie Mad" and "Scrappily Married" are announced as two two-reel comedies just completed at the Christie studios in Los Angeles for release through Educational Exchanges in January.

Dorothy Devore returns to the Christie lot in "Movie Mad," in which she is featured with Neal Burns. "Scrappily Married" marks the second appearance of Harry Gribbon in a Christie comedy his first having been "Don't Blame the Stork." Helen Darling and Margaret Cullington have important roles.

Chaney in Universal Film

Popular Actor Plays with Priscilla Dean in "Outside the Law"

LON CHANEY is said to have the most convincing role of his career in "Outside the Law," the new Universal Jewel production starring Priscilla Dean. Universal officials who have seen the picture in the cutting and editing rooms, unite in saying that Chaney has outdone himself in clever characterization.

Chaney plays an underworld part entirely unlike any he has tackled heretofore. It is not as a hopeless cripple, his remarkable role in "The Miracle Man," or as a legless king of criminals, such as he played in "The Penalty." In "Outside the Law," Chaney is "Black Mike Silva," accepted leader of San Francisco's gangsters and other shady characters.

In "Black Mike" Chaney is said to have created the most virile and unscrupulous role of his many screen villainies. "Black Mike" is a malicious figure whose sole motive in life is revenge. He has no fear but one, that for his former chief, "Silent Madden," who has turned straight. His fear is so compelling that he goes to every possible extreme to rid himself of it, by putting "Madden" and his clever daughter, "Silky Moll Madden" out of the way. This latter character is played by Priscilla Dean.

"Outside the Law" now is in the last stages of editing and titling. A finished print of the big Universal Jewel is expected in the East in a few weeks.

Shot "Exteriors" in Studio

Charles Ray Films "Exteriors" Indoors with Effective Results

ASSOCIATED First National Pictures reports that Charles Ray has demonstrated to his own satisfaction and to the pleasure of a great many other people a theory he has held ever since he has been acting for pictures, that "outside" locations can be more effective if located inside the walls of a studio. In "Nineteen and Phyllis" every scene was taken inside the Charles Ray studio, and while the story abounds with exteriors the fact that they were taken inside of walls is not apparent in the production, declares First National in the statement just issued.

When Mr. Ray concluded his contract with Associated First National Pictures, Inc., which assured him an outlet for independently produced pictures, he immediately apprised his associates of his theory that in a great many cases an exterior suffered through the exhaustion of the cast in reaching location and the tiresome rides which frequently ensued. He also declared that he knew of many times when he did not feel up to the mark in going through with scenes due to a tedious wait while in make-up for lighting conditions to become right. He declared that in his opinion there was never an outdoor setting taken, outside of scenics, which could not be improved upon inside the walls of a well-conducted studio.

Consequently when the Fleming Street studio, in Los Angeles, which used to house the Kalem and other producing companies, was taken over for the Charles Ray productions, remodeling of it was commenced to make it fit in with the young star's ideas as to what was necessary for a complete motion picture studio. This included the construction of a large lot under glass so that natural light could be utilized when necessary or available, but where artificial light was always ready.

The practical aspects of the housed "outside" sets was strikingly demonstrated in the taking of "Nineteen and Phyllis," it is declared. There was doubt as to whether the new "conservatory lot" would be completed in time for use on this production, and location men were busy many weeks in advance looking for settings which would fit into the theme of the story. The sets found were not as satisfactory as the studio sets.

Fish Story or Press Yarn? You Win

Gordon Mullen, heavy man and all around villain for Irvin V. Willat in his second independent production "Partners of the Tide," had quite an unusual experience in a diving suit, on the bottom of San Pedro Harbor, recently. Mullen had made the decent to the bottom of the harbor safely and was about to give the signal to be pulled up when he felt a slight trickling of water on his neck. Turning his head in the helmet he felt a squirt of water in his eye. This handed him a scare, and knowing that it would not take long at that rate for the suit to fill up, he felt for the leak on his helmet. The water was leaking in through the safety valve, which serves the purpose of discharging all "extra" air pumped into the suit, into the water outside. He screwed this valve up and the water stopped. Breathing a sigh of relief he reached for the rope but having shut this valve off too tight the suti filled up with air pumped to him from above and blew up like a balloon. Not knowing what to do he unstrapped his weights and heavy shoes. For the next few minutes it would take someone from the barge above, and not Mullen, to tell what happened. Something popped out of the water and leaped into the air like a flying fish—it was Mullen—the suit having filled up with air and being released from the weights which kept him down had brought him to the surface in double quick time. The helmet being the only heavy weight on the suit caused him to float half submerged on the surface WITH HIS HEAD DOWN. After a boat had been sent to the rescue and Mullen found himself again standing on good old mother earth (the dry part) it took a good bit of coaxing to get that suit on him again. A diver was sent to the bottom to find the weights and heavy shoes, and everyone had a hearty laugh at Mullen's expense.

Newest George Walsh Feature Ready

George Walsh's newest William Fox production, "Number 17," is now ready for release.

The entertainment has much Chinese atmosphere. The plot deals with the work of an influential Chinaman who believes big American financiers are enemies of his country.

Mildred Reardon is Walsh's leading woman in "Number 17." Miss Reardon came from the coast but recently. Others in the cast are Charles Mussette, Lillian Beck, Louis R. Wolheim, Harold Thomas, Charles Slattery, Jack Newton, Spencer Charters and Lillian Griffis.

Realart's Star Franchise Is Held by Majority of Big Circuits

Sixty-four Circuits, Covering Every Section of Country, on the List

REALART emphasizes a noteworthy fact in the announcement this week that, with very few exceptions, all the dominant motion-picture theatre-circuits in the country are holders of Realart's Star Franchise for 1920-21, carrying with it the theatre rights to thirty-six productions.

There are sixty-four motion picture house circuits on Realart's list of franchise holders, covering every section of the United States. They include a majority of the largest and best known circuits as well as a big percentage of the smaller ones. These circuits are represented by theatres in every large city. The territory covered by them takes in the key cities of New York, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, Philadelphia, Boston, Omaha, Minneapolis, Chicago, Cincinnati, Kansas City, Detroit, Buffalo, Cleveland, Atlanta, Charlotte, Dallas, New Orleans, Pittsburgh, Washington, and St. Louis.

Several circuits have secured the franchise for all of their theatres. In every case Realart pictures will be shown in one or more houses in a given circuit, it is stated.

"The importance of this announcement can scarcely be overemphasized," said General Manager J. S. Woody. "Realart considers itself exceptionally fortunate because in practically every section of the country where there is an important circuit, that circuit is a holder of Realart's Star Franchise.

"While it is purely a matter of cold business with these circuits it is, none the less, a high tribute to the wide popularity of Realart's pictures that they have been chosen by practically all of the largest and most powerful circuits.

"The significance attaching to such an achievement is, I think, quite plain. Circuits such as the S. A. Lynch Enterprises and the Saenger Circuit in the South; the Stanley Booking Company in Philadelphia; W. P. Gray and A. S. Black in New England; Lubliner & Trinz, Ascher Brothers and Fitzpatrick & McElroy in Chicago; Rubin & Finkelstein in Minneapolis; and the Loew, Moss, Fox and Keith circuits in New York, to mention but a few, are not institutions created over night. Quite the contrary. Go back a few years and you will find that each of these present dominating factors in the exhibitors' field started in a small way.

"They started small but have enjoyed a rapid and healthy growth. Why? Because they have filled a very definite need in the motion picture industry—the skillful selection of a consistent program. They recognized, early in the business, that the dominant factor for success is entertainment value; that the motion-picture feature is the one thing around which to build their business.

"Study the producers and distributors who have been allied with these successful circuits. You will soon discern that Marcus Loew, William Fox, S. A. Lynch, A. S. Black and these other shrewd men seem to have an almost uncanny ability to pick the winners. They not only selected them; they tied up with them. Their prosperity meant the producers' prosperity. The oldest and most successful producers, in their very infancy, had what were then termed the baby circuits as their customers. Both are now in lusty manhood and the same cordial relationship still exists.

"And these men are typical of all circuit heads who have chosen Realart pictures. Take one circuit—that of Marcus Loew—for example. Here is an organization that at present is serving 80,000,000 patrons annually. In 1910 Mr. Loew had five theatres in New York, one in New Rochelle and one in Hoboken. His New York houses then had a total seating capacity of 6,872. Today he controls 102 theatres, extending in a chain from the Atlantic to the Pacific. His theatres in Greater New York alone have a total seating capacity of 52,914. Next year it is estimated his houses will serve 140,000,000 people. And Loew's is only one of the sixty-four circuits that have signed up for Realart service.

"Realart values the franchise business of these sixty-four circuits—not only on account of the present business involved, but in a much greater respect because of the faith they have evidenced in the Realart organization as a whole. We are satisfied that these shrewd buyers do not put stars into their theatres unless they are very certain they will be surrounded by the ultimate in story, direction and cast. Further, they must believe that the Realart Star Franchise carries its guarantee of high-quality box office attractions not only for the 1920-21 season, but also that it will be an asset for years to come, each year to show a healthy increase in actual value."

The Star Franchise system is regarded as novel in the history of motion picture distribution. Under it exhibitors receive the theatre rights to each of the thirty-six productions without having to buy territorial rights or assume obligations respecting the marketing of the pictures. It is pointed out that with a specified number of pictures being produced for the Star Franchise it is possible to devote particular attention to the story, title

Six actresses are engaged in making Realart pictures. They are Alice Brady, Mary Miles Minter, Constance Binney, Bebe Daniels, Wanda Hawley and Justine Johnstone.

The Star Franchise productions already released include, "You Never Can Tell" and "Oh Lady, Lady," featuring Bebe Daniels; "Eyes of the Heart" and "Sweet Lavender," with Mary Miles Minter; "The New York Idea," with Alice Brady; "Blackbirds," with Justine Johnstone; "Something Different," with Constance Binney; and "Food For Scandal," "Her Beloved Villain" and "Her First Elopement," with Wanda Hawley.

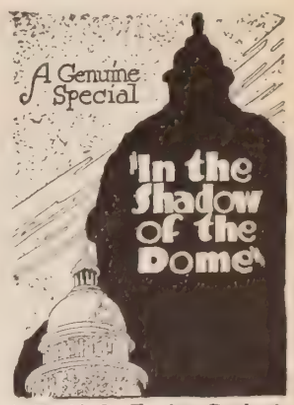
Has Developed Powerful Lens Is Claim

S. M. Tompkins, chief of Universal's protographic department, claims to have developed a lens equal to the pre-war product of the German lens makers. Tompkins, in working out the formulae for the new lens, worked in conjunction with expert opticians from several of America's leading photographic concerns. Tompkins hopes to have finished specimens of his lens ready for the filming of Priscilla Dean's next big picture, "False Colors," to be put into production in several weeks.



A David G Fischer Production

Goldwyn announces that Will Rogers' new stellar vehicle, "Guile of Women," based upon a story by Peter Clarke MacFarlane, will shortly be in all twenty-two Goldwyn branch exchanges. Goldwyn is basing great expectations upon this new Will Rogers' picture. He is seen in the role of a Swedish sailor adrift in San Francisco.

The picture was directed by Clarence Badger. In the strong supporting cast are Mary Warren, Bert Sprotte, Lionel Belmore, Chas. A. Smily, Nick Cogley, Doris Pawn, John Lince and Jane Starr. The star had a hand in editing and titling the picture, as is his custom in all productions in which he appears.

A gorgeous scene from "The Empire of Diamonds," a new Leonce-Perret production for Pathe

Pathe's December Releases

Perret Picture Due December 19; Seitz Feature Set for the 26th

PATHE'S releases for the last two weeks in December will bring forth "The Empire of Diamonds," produced by Leonce Perret; and "Rogues and Romance," the George B. Seitz production co-starring June Caprice with Seitz. In these pictures will be staged melodramatic romances set against European backgrounds. In both, American characters are involved in adventures transpiring in Europe.

The Perret production provides the novelty of a story with a change of scene which shows the principal characters in London, Paris, Monte Carlo and famous resorts of the Riviera and New York. Rogues and Romance, a love romance of an American who on a visit to Spain becomes enamoured of the daughter of an American official, tells its story in the actual atmosphere of Granada, certain of its scenes being taken within the walls of the famous Alhambra and the provinces of Seville, Malaga and about the fortress of Tarifa in Southern Spain.

Offered for release December 19th, "The Empire of Diamonds" will be the first work produced by Mr. Perret in some time. In the filming of this play, his own adaptation of a celebrated novel by Valentin Mandelstamm, a noted French novelist, Mr. Perret spent many weeks in traveling with his company, which included Lucy Fox, Henry G. Sell, Robert Elliott and other well-known American screen players. Interiors of the Casino at Monte Carlo are a feature of the settings.

"Rogues and Romance," released December 26th, is Mr. Seitz's first feature production and because of the elaborate and striking staging he has given the piece it is predicted he will duplicate his success in the serial field with a feature that will attract public attention to its director and star. The play is an adaptation of "The Golden Senorita," a stage work written by Mr. Seitz some time ago.

The major portion of the picture was filmed in Spain. Six weeks were spent there by Mr. Seitz, Miss Caprice, Miss Courtot and the other members of the company.

Carter Series in January

Pioneer to Release Famous Detective Pictures First of Year

A SPECIAL announcement from the headquarters of the Pioneer Film Corporation issued yesterday over the signature of President A. E. Lefcourt tells of the scheduled release, the beginning of the new year, of the Nick Carter two-reelers, adapted from the famous detective stories.

"Indications point to the most unusual success being recorded with the Nick Carter two-reelers," says a statement from Pioneer headquarters. "The series is made up of fifteen two-reel pictures, each one interpreting the best of the stories published by Street and Smith, and each story opens an avenue for all the 'action' imaginable. We have decided to commence the release of the Nick Carter picture January 1." Those who have seen the splendid Nick Carter productions acclaim them as excellent propaganda for the upholding of law in order, and the clever way in which the Broadwell Productions, Inc., has handled these stories for the film, will bring to this concern the praise due it.

"Nick" is portrayed by Thomas Carrigan. He needs no introduction to the screen, having been a favorite for many years. Mae Gaston portrays the character of "Patsy"—Nicks first assistant.—while Colin Chase, interprets the role of "Chick."

The Pioneer Film Corporation is arranging most unusual advertising and publicity campaign.

M.P.D.A. Gives Fourth Annual Dinner

Each year the M. P. D. A., the only organized body of directors of the motion picture, "get together" for an annual talk fest and winter feast. Heretofore, it has been confined to members and a few male guests. This season, since the subject will be "The Progress of the Art," with which the fair sex have had so much to do, ladies will also number among the prominent guests. There are to be authors, composers, playwrights, editors of theatrical, trade and daily papers, as well as the heads of financial concerns and executives of other important industries. The dinner, at 7:30, Dec. 7, will be served during a musical program, followed by other forms of entertainment. It is predicted that this will be among the "biggest little affairs" ever given by the organization supported solely by directors of the motion picture, and it is anticipated by those sufficiently fortunate to be upon the invitation list, as a promising event.

Dee Robinson Acquires Big Peoria Theatre

Announcement was made in Peoria this week of the merger of the Irvin theatre of Bloomington, Illinois, with the Dee Robinson interests of Peoria. The Robinson Theatre Company, of which Dee Robinson is president, now controls the new half-million dollar Madison theatre, in Peoria, and four other Peoria theatres.

The Irvin theatre was built a few years ago by Clarence Irvin and is a fifteen hundred seat house. It is a modern theatre in every respect, and is said to be one of the most beautiful in Illinois.

Mr. Robinson has obtained control through a ten year lease, which will be effective December 1st.

Guy Martin, present manager of the Irvin theatre, will be retained as resident manager, but Sam Robinson of Peoria, former manager of the Princess theatre at Peoria and now head of the Robinson Advertising Company, will look after the Robinson Theatre Company's interests.

"Down Home," the first Irvin V. Willat production, which Hodkinson released in October, has been meeting with very great success wherever shown, declares W. W. Hodkinson. Now an interesting new idea has been developed. Comes word from Joe Bloom, Kansas City District Supervisor for Hodkinson, that he has just completed plans for a "Road-Show" of the production, which will be accompanied by a six-piece jazz band.

The show will tour the State of Nebraska for an indefinite run, and high hopes are held out for its success.

Fellowes Has Dual Role in Paramount Film

Rockcliffe Fellowes, well known leading man, plays a dual role in "The Price of Possession," the new Paramount picture, starring Ethel Clayton. The picture, which is nearing completion at the Famous-Players' Long Island City Studio, was adapted for the screen from the Winifred Boggs story of the same name.

In the character of first, a hard and scoundrelly husband, and later as the masterful lover who wins the heart of the lady who has usurped his estates, Fellowes does some of the best work of his career. He makes an admirable foil for Miss Clayton, with whom he has been seen in many pictures.

"The Price of Possession" is being made under the direction of Hugh Ford and is said to be one of the best vehicles in which Miss Clayton has yet been seen. It is also the second picture to be made from start to finish at the new Famous-Players' Studio in Long Island City.

George Wm. Hill Will Direct Miss Lovely

George William Hill has been engaged by William Fox to direct his new star, Louise Lovely. Mr. Hill's first work will be distributed shortly after the New Year, when exhibitors and their public will see the results of an early training under David W. Griffith and finishing touches later as assistant to George Loane Tucker—experience Mr. Hill gained during several years' work in Hollywood studios.

Three scenes from "Someone in the House," a Metro production with an all-star cast

The resources of Paramount's new Long Island studio have been turned over to the Americanization committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry for the making of "Bullets or Ballots," one of a series of films that are being made for the Government and designed to awaken the political conscience of Americans.

E. M. Wooley, assistant to Thomas Geraghty, production editor of Paramount's eastern studio, is directing the picture. The picture will be one reel in length, but, according to Mr. Wooley, will be crowded with thrills. Howard Young wrote the story and continuity, and Frank Wright Tuttle is assisting in the production.

Lynn Berry is playing the leading male role in the picture, which is being made without cost to the Government.

Rowland Lauds Keaton's Work

RICHARD ROWLAND, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, declares that Buster Keaton is "the greatest comedy sensation since the heyday of Charlie Chaplin and Roscoe Arbuckle in one-reelers." Metro is releasing the Buster Keaton series of comedy productions which are filmed under the auspices of Joseph M. Schenck. Says Mr. Rowland in a statement issued:

"Buster Keaton in the not far distant future will wear undisputed the crown of comedy king of the season," said the Metro executive recently, discussing the sensational success of the initial Keaton picture. "Even now he is the greatest comedy sensation since the heyday of Charlie Chaplin and Roscoe Arbuckle in two-reelers. Buster Keaton is equipped by nature and his long experience in the theatre, with everything that a comedian needs. He has a sense of comedy values that is extraordinary, and knows every 'gag' or device that can be relied upon to provoke laughter.

"This young comedian has the priceless gift of gravity so pronounced, for instance, in the work of Chaplin and other great funmakers. Without ever smiling himself, he is able to convulse audiences in a manner that would be an utter impossibility to the comedian who wears a grin."

Mr. Rowland's high estimate of Buster Keaton's work and his prophecy of a roseate future for the young man are borne out by the tremendous demand for his work manifested by large and small exhibitors everywhere Metro declares. Metro reports that bookings for the Keaton comedies have surpassed their greatest expectations. Many houses have contracted for the entire series of two-reelers, while Grauman's Rialto and the Alhambra theatre in Los Angeles have broken long standing rules to show the Keaton pictures as added attractions for runs of three weeks and more.

"The funniest man in pictures—yet he never smiles;" said Marcus Loew, president of Loew's, Inc., after seeing Keaton's first comedy.

Motion picture critics throughout the country have praised Buster's work. Frank E. White, dramatic editor of the Denver Post, and considered the leading authority of the stage and screen in the Rocky Mountain regions, has the following to say regarding Keaton:

"A comedian, and who as far as my opinion goes, has greater possibilities than any of the others, is Buster Keaton. He has recently become a star in his own comedies, and he now has his chance. There is something about this young man that is similar to Chaplin. His method may be quite different, but in a photograph it will be noticed that there is appealing wistfulness in the eyes of both. Buster never smiles in his pictures. He is always a bit pathetic. It seems that this is necessary to real comedy. The pathetic and ridiculous are so closely allied.

"Whether Keaton feels it or not he has the appearance of being rather sad. His mouth, too, is sensitive. Can it be that to be really funny, a comedian has to make his audience laugh at him and not with him? It would seem so, and there is none of the screen comedians who is so well qualified to do this as Buster Keaton."

Will Film the Mining Industry

U. S. Bureau of Mines Plans Complete Film Library

ADDRESSING the American Mining Congress in Denver, M. F. Leopold, Safety Engineer of the United States Bureau of Mines, told that the Bureau proposed to build up the world's largest library of mining and metallurgical educational films. The intention is to film every branch of the American Mining Industry in such detail that technical universities can procure pictures that will visualize any subject which the students are studying from their books.

The Bureau has made a big start toward the world's largest mining film library, having already, films on a number of branches of mining. All these pictures are produced by the Rothacker Film Company.

Special lighting equipment is needed to make pictures in many of the mines. As far as the Bureau experts know the Rothacker Company is the only film concern that has the equipment which will permit of making pictures in mines containing explosive gases. In his convention speech, Mr. Leopold paid a high tribute to the quality of mining films the Rothacker Company has made for the Bureau.

"Recently the Rothacker Company filmed 'The Story of Coal.' The Bureau is informed by the Coal Mining Industry that this Rothacker picture has done more to acquaint technical school students, as well as the laymen, with the conditions that enter into bringing the coal from the mine to the consumer, than any other publicity means that the Bureau has employed. Requests for this particular film have been so numerous that a print cannot be procured for at least a month after it is asked for."

Mr. Leopold told that 84 per cent of the American universities are provided with equipment for picture projection. Thirty-seven of the states have well organized societies for the promotion of visual education, and through these organizations the Bureau's educational pictures are being distributed to the lower grade schools as well as the colleges.

New Hodkinson Sales-Head

P. N. Brinch with Hodkinson from Start Appointed Sales Manager

W. W. HODKINSON, head of the corporation which bears his name, has appointed P. N. Brinch to the post of sales manager of the company. If ever a promotion was justly earned by consistent hard and intelligent effort, Mr. Brinch's is that promotion. declares W. W. Hodkinson. He has been associated with Mr. Hodkinson since the organization was formed in 1917 and has served faithfully from the date of the company's inception.

Mr. Brinch may really be considered to be a veteran of the motion picture industry, for he first started in it in 1907, at which time he became connected with Pathe Freres in New York. When the General Film Company was formed in 1910 he took a position in their home offices. and it is interesting to note, that at that time W. W. Hodkinson was the western division manager of the same company.

Mr. Brinch left the General Film Company in 1913 to associate himself with the Mutual Film Corporation, where he served as comptroller during the next two years. In 1915 and 1916 he was with Triangle, this time in the capacity of western division manager. When Mr. Hodkinson formed his present organization in 1917, he called Mr. Brinch to assist him in the working out of his plans.

As has been said, he is thoroughly schooled in every angle of the business both in America and abroad, for he has but recently returned from a five months' trip on the Continent, where he was busily engaged in studying conditions in every field.

It is predicted by Hodkinson officials that under the leadership of such a man as P. N. Brinch, the Hodkinson sales force will undoubtedly be spurred on to even greater efforts than heretofore, and that results will be achieved which will exceed all expectations.

To Release "The Spenders"

Benjamin B. Hampton Production Is Next to Be Released by Hodkinson

THE next Benj. B. Hampton production scheduled for release beneath the Hodkinson banner will be "The Spenders." Harry Leon Wilson wrote the story. It was adapted to the screen by E. Richard Schayer and was directed by Jack Conway, who has been responsible for many past Benj. B. Hampton successes, among which may be mentioned "Riders of the Dawn," "The Dwelling Place of Light" and "The U. P. Trail."

In the cast is Claire Adams, who has been seen to advantage in other Benjamin B. Hampton productions; Robert McKim, a screen villain of national repute; Joseph J. Dowling, starred recently in another Hodkinson release, "The Kentucky Colonel," and whose work as the "Miracle Man" in George Loane Tucker's splendid production stands out prominently; Niles Welch, the engaging juvenile; Betty Brice, Adele Farrington, Virginia Harris, Otto Lederer, Tom Ricketts and Harold Holland.

"The Spenders" is a fast-moving comedy-drama, which tells of the adventures and mis-adventures of the Bines family.

There are many charming love scenes, a vast amount of comedy and a great deal of tingling suspense, declare Hodkinson.

Cutting Is an Arduous Job

Paramount Describes Steps Taken in Cutting a DeMille Production

"CONTRARY to popular opinion, the cutting of a picture ranks very close to the actual directing and filming of the scenes in point of labor and difficulties to be overcome."

So says Cecil B. DeMille, director-general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and producer of nearly two score.

"Forbidden Fruit" offers an interesting example. When "cut to continuity," the negative of "Forbidden Fruit" totalled eleven reels inasmuch as the finished picture was designed to total seven reels considerable cutting was needed to bring this total of eleven full reels down to the required footage, declares Paramount in a statement just issued.

This work was done entirely by Cecil B. DeMille, assisted by Ann Bauchens. Together these veterans of film-cutting ran the print of "Forbidden Fruit" again and again. When matters pertaining to the subtitles were under discussion, Jeanie Macpherson, author of the scenario, was called into consultation.

With each running of the picture, Cecil B. DeMille exercised his editorial prerogative with the result that the total footage steadily decreased. Incidents that did not seem to be absolutely essential to the smooth continuity of the story were lifted out bodily; scenes that as filmed were longer than necessary were reduced in size. Wherever the action threatened to drag it was speeded up by the shortening of scenes. The footage was thus reduced to eight reels.

At this point, Cecil B. DeMille called in such experts as William DeMille, himself a producer of note; Frank Woods, supervising director of Paramount Pictures; and the members of the Cecil B. DeMille production staff who were thoroughly familiar with the story

Whenever in the course of the projection of this story one or more of the audience threatened to be bored, the producer made a note of the occasion and proceeded to remedy the difficulty by the elimination of minor episodes or by speeding up the action.

Thus, at the end of weeks of labor and thought, "Forbidden Fruit" reached an approximation of the required footage.

Special to Mark New Epoch

So Says First National of Allen Holubar's "Man, Woman, Marriage"

THAT "Man, Woman, Marriage" marks a new epoch in the history of film production is the contention of those persons who have been given an opportunity to see this picture, according to a statement from the headquarters of the Associated First National Pictures in New York. "Man, Woman, Marriage" is an Allen Holubar production, starring Dorothy Phillips. It is declared that the cutting alone took up two months of Mr. Holubar's time. First National issues the following statement in connection with "Man, Woman, Marriage:"

"Mr. Holubar, who wrote the script, spent three years in preparing the continuity before he ever began the engagement of the cast. During the writing he experimented, it is said, many times with a camera to see if the effects desired were as practical as the theoretical preparation of them indicated. Nothing was left to chance and when he finally pronounced it ready for production every new effect in it had been tested out in a practical manner and the whole work of transferring the story to the film had been mapped out in the minutest detail.

"This minute preparation of the story had another effect which is noticeable in the production, according to those who have seen it. The leading part in it was written especially for Dorothy Phillips, and Mr. Holubar's intimate acquaintance with her abilities through having directed her in "The Heart of Humanity" and for other notable productions enabled him to write a part which enables her to do the best work of her entire career.

"The filming of the production took nearly eight months, chiefly because of the care which was taken with every detail, and the overshooting of nearly every scene to provide against accident in the development and other technical handling. Even after the filming was completed nearly two months were spent in the cutting and assembling, while experiments were conducted to determine the best possible effects to be gained through the use of the wealth of material which the overshooting had supplied.

"The others in the cast, aside from Miss Phillips, give assurance of the care with which Mr. Holubar selected the actors and actresses to portray the theme. Among them are James Kirkwood, J. Barney Sherry, Robert Cain, Margaret Mann, Ralph Lewis, Shannon Day, Emily Chichester and Frances Park."

Von Tilzer, of Stoll, of Musical Family

Jack Von Tilzer, whose appointment as assistant general manager of Stoll Film Corporation of America was announced last week, is a member of the well-known musical family of that name. Mr. Von Tilzer has had large experience on the music side of amusements as well as on that of film, especially in the production department.

French Film Men Criticize Government

THE attitude of the French government towards the French Moving Picture Industry has just been subjected to a scathing criticitism at the hands of its most prominent representatives. The occasion was the banquet given recently under the auspices of the French Film Authors' Society in Paris which gathered together a large number of the best-known names in the French cinema world.

The French Motion Picture Industry declared the speakers on this occasion is suffering from strangulation through the burdensome and excessive system of taxation imposed upon it by the government. This was the gist of the charge with which the government was indicted and against which it was declared it behooved all those interested to unite in seeking and adopting a remedy. It was pointed out in plain but forceful language that the film industry was being irremediably jeopardized by the shortsighted policy of the government which was shackling with heavy taxes a branch of trade which was struggling under numerous disadvantages—not the least of which was enormous competition from abroad—but which if properly nurtured and protected could develop into one of the most lucrative sources of revenue for the country. In other words the government was already bent upon killing the goose even before it had begun to lay its golden eggs. If there was a crisis in the Film world in France, it was stated, it was undoubtedly due to the ignorance of parliament concerning the growth and conditions of the industry. Apparently unmindful of the serious setback which the French Motion Picture had suffered through the war, the government under the delusion that the making and presenting of films is an inexpensive and profitable undertaking, has laid upon it a prohibitive system of taxation which attains as much as thirty-five per cent of the receipts and in certain cases jumps to even fifty per cent. The result was that only the most financially sound dared risk their money in such an enterprise where the meagre initial profits were so ruthlessly seized by the grasping hand of a treasury that sought by every means, fair or foul, to fill its exhausted coffers in the shortest time possible. Other consequences of this heavy method of taxation were declared to be the stunting of the growth and development of the industry, the paralysing of initiative and impossibility of producing better class but more expensive films which are urgently required to raise the standard in France and satisfy the public's craving for superior and more artistic pictures. Finally the system exposed the home industry to the mercy of the foreign market which dumped its goods at the rate of untold millions a year and took the bread as it were out of the mouths of their own people. It was inevitable that such a tirade should not conclude without a reference to the principal offender. America, it was stated, exported to France to the extent of 30 million francs a year and her supply was on the increase. Therefore, it was urged, only one alternative was left for French film producers, to appeal to parliament and insist that the foreigner be burdened with a prohibitive tariff while reducing the tax on home industries and giving them a chance to thrive. I have made enquiries among representatives of American film houses in Paris with a view to obtaining their opinion on the truth and justice of these complaints from their French colleagues and on the possibility of any action that may ensue therefrom. One and all refused to display any alarm, declaring that the prejudice against the American film existed only among the trade and was a natural if unfair form of bias that could not be destroyed but could certainly not prove harmful. "After all," as one prominent American film man remarked, "the public is what counts and the public has put its mark of approval upon American films and will continue to insist upon getting them until the French picture can oust it through sheer merit and value for money." Another to whom I submitted the question characterized the French complaint as so much "froth" and added that as long as America continued to send over well-made and well-conceived pictures she would have nothing to fear from any proposed action that is prompted by a desire to kill competition rather than to improve the quality of the goods in question.

The Pathe Consortium, Cinema, which has replaced famous Pathe Cinema, in announcing officially its formation as a company, is issuing through the Banque Industrielle de Paris 190,000 shares at 112.50 francs the share, of which 37.50 francs are required as an initial payment. The new company allots 50,000 shares to the original holders of Pathe Cinema shares. Consortium is to exploit the whole of the commercial end of the old company throughout the world with certain reservations in Great Britain, Russia and the United States. In taking over the work previously exploited by the Pathe Cinema the new group draws attention to the fact that the original company's receipts for the past years have shown increasing figures. In 1918 they amounted to 13 millions of francs; in 1919 to 20 millions while a further increase is expected for this year.

Film stars may be excused if they occasionally break forth into rhapsodies over a picture in which they hold the leading role and over the person to whose genius it is due. Miss Ivy Close, the beautiful English screen actress, has been availing herself of this prerogative in an interview just given and the theme of her outburst is the remarkable French film "Rose of the Rail" and its equally remarkable producer, Abel Gance. According to Miss Close, who plays the heroine's part, "Rose of the Rail" must be the greatest film ever made. The imaginative power behind it is stupendous and it thrills and interests through every inch of its 10,000 feet. Its producer has already used up something like 150,000 feet of negative and expects to run into 200,000 before the picture is completed. It has been running for nine months and still has several weeks more to go. The cost has so far been staggering. In order to carry out his ideas, Gance hired scores of locomotives from the P. L. M., built a number of mobile stations at different points on the line near Nice and during several months he and his troupe cut themselves off from the rest of the world and led the life of the line with all its hardships and fatigue plus a generous infiltration of thrills and sensations such as may be expected from the extremely fertile and imaginative mind of a producer like Gance. "Wait till you see one of those huge locomotives leaping at you out of the screen," said Miss Close. "You will also see me in overalls, driving one of them," she added. "We can all drive locomotives now."

From Nice the party went to the Alps, where the scene is transferred. Here the genius of Gance and his dogged tenacity in the face of almost insuperable obstacles were seen at their best. For one set of scenes he built and furnished a cottage half way up Mont Blanc, transporting all the material piece by piece and obtaining his electric power from below by means of big cables. On one occasion the party of 35 was held up by snowstorms for four days. On another an avalanche caught the tail of the troupe and buried three of its members, who had to be dug out. "Rose of the Rail," according to its heroine, is simply chock full of sensational human interest. The story is woven round the love of three men for a girl—one an old engine driver who rescued the girl when she was a baby after a terrible railroad smash in which both her parents perish the other his son and the third a wealthy railroad magnate, whom she eventually marries. The son becomes jealous of the husband and a desperate fight takes place between him and the husband on the edge of a precipice high up on Mont Blanc, whither the scene has been transferred. One of the most impressive incidents is the scene after the railroad smash when the signalman who is the cause of the accident comes out of his cabin and goes raving mad on the line. M. Gance informs me that he and his troupe are off shortly to the Pyrennes, where the final scenes of this remarkable film will be made. I asked for an estimation of the cost so far and was told that two million francs would not cover it. There is a suggestion that another name should be found than that of the present melodramatic title, and I understand that "La Roue"—The Wheel—is likely to be adopted. The end of the year should see the completion of this film, which will be released in March, 1921. It will be recalled that Abel Gance was the producer of the picture "J'Accuse," which has just been released in England.

Beauty is not an essential for success but it is undeniably a powerful asset and many a time has proved its potency in swinging open the golden gates of fame. Not many months ago a demure little maiden of eighteen, with her nut-brown hair hanging down her back, was basking in the brilliant sunshine and inhaling the fragrance of the roses of the soft and salubrious climate of Biarritz. Then one day in response to an idle whim she sent a photograph of herself to Paris. A short while after back came the answer announcing that she had been chosen from a whole bevy of beauties as the most beautiful girl in France. This was Mademoiselle Agnes Souret, whose picture is today known all over France. But this sudden leap into fame meant something else than merely glancing coyly from a photograph. Almost before she realized it she was whisked off to Paris by an enterprising impresario and set down upon the stage of the Folies Bergère, one of the best known variety theatres in the capital, among a galaxy of dazzling beauties with nothing special to do but to look pretty. But the enterprising impresario was not to have things all his own way. Along came an equally alert film director and despite what seemed like an iron-bound contract carried her off dramatically in the dead of night to one of the most beautiful and picturesque spots of France, the Mont Saint Michel, a rocky fortress-like island recalling Gibraltar, on the Channel coast. Here she made her screen début as the heroine of a new French film entitled appropriately "Le Lys du Mont-Saint-Michel"—The Lily of St. Michael's Mount. The scenario is taken from a novel of M. Trilby called "The Last Dream" (Le Dernier Rêve) in which the magnificent old castle on the Mount forms the romantic background for a charming story. This is the first time that this venerable pile has ever figured on the screen and the producer, M. Alexis Dal Medico had first to obtain authorization from the Minister of Fine Arts since the whole of the Mount is classed as a national monument The picture is expected to be released in Paris at an early date.

The beautiful Griffith production "Broken Blossoms" is being awaited impatiently in France where its reputation has preceded it. It is scheduled to be shown at the Marivaux theatre in Paris on December 17. Something unique for France is to be observed about this picture for which the public has long since been prepared by the glowing reports it received when it was shown to the trade and the press. So heavy are the bookings expected to be that a notice has been posted outside the theatre advising the public that seats may be engaged now. The management states that the demand even so far in advance has been heavy and is becoming heavier each day.

The great Paris newspaper the "Matin" scored a triumph in hustle last week. By seven o'clock in the evening of November eleventh, the

The fourth of the Bush theatres—the Vista—is to be opened in East San Diego before the holidays, is the announcement of G. A. Bush, head of the corporation. The Vista, which is the remodelled and reconstructed house formerly at Camp Kearny, will have a seating capacity of 600 and will use second-run pictures, similar to the Silver Strand, the company's house at Coronado, across the bay.

The Broadway, one of the Bush theatres, has a new house manager in Richard A. Addison, formerly with motion picture houses in Detroit, Mich. He succeeds Wm. Stammler, who has gone north. Margaret Currier has succeeded Mary T. Howe as cashier at the Silver Strand.

Plans are under way whereby the city park board will enter into a lease for three years with a large producing company which desires to use what was known as the Southern California Counties' building of the Panama-California exposition, still standing in Balboa Park. The building would be used for stage purposes and developing plant, while the park itself affords a great variety of exteriors, with bay, ocean and mountains within easy distances.

As an aftermath of the "flu" epidemic of two years ago, when motion picture houses and other places of amusement were temporarily closed by the authorities, a judgment for $457.15 has just been entered against the Broadway Amusement Company of San Diego, Cal., in favor of Harry V. and Owna Side, two actors who had been engaged for the company's theatre at Camp Kearny, the amount covering the period from Dec. 12, 1918, to Jan. 13, 1919, during which they were waiting for the theatre to reopen.

SAN FRANCISCO

Frank J. Costello, for the last year manager of the Tivoli Opera House, San Francisco, has been appointed general manager of the Turner and Dahnken circuit. L. R. Crook has resigned. Costello became connected with the Tivoli two and a half years ago as assistant-manager and continued in that position until taking full charge of the house. Under his management the Tivoli has enjoyed great popularity and has become noted for the manner in which its supplementary attractions and music have been presented.

The position left vacant by the promotion of Costello has been filled by the advancement of Irvin E. Phelps, formerly assistant-manager of the house. Phelps has been in the employ of Turner and Dahnken for a number of years and is qualified in every particular to perform his new duties.

James H. Wall has been appointed treasurer of the California theatre, San Francisco, in place of Tom Cohen, who has been given the post of purchasing agent for the California, Imperial and Portola theatres. C. M. Pincus, manager of the California theatre, is greatly increasing the prestige of his theatre through his recent efforts to make the Sunday morning concerts a success.

OMAHA

C. O. Kingsley has resigned his position as manager of Realart to assume the managership of Robertson-Cole Company in Omaha. Steve O'Brien, New York City, has succeeded Mr. Kingsley.

J. F. Brett, former manager of Robertson-Cole in Omaha, has been transferred to offices in Michigan City, Ind.

O. R. Hanson, central district supervisor for Robertson-Cole, made a trip of inspection through the Middle West states last week.

Officials of the Omaha Film Board of Trade were summoned to Columbus, Neb., last week to testify in the suit of Harry Swan against A. H. Blank Enterprises, alleging violation of the Judkin's anti-trust act. C. E. Holah, former manager of A. H. Blank Enterprises in Omaha, and H. F. Lefholtz, manager of Universal in Omaha, were principal witnesses for the defense.

Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges for Pathe in the United States, presided over a conference of Pathe exchange managers of Middle West cities in Omaha on November 23. He assisted Howard E. Graham, local Pathe manager, in "putting across" Pathe News Week about Omaha. Mr. Pearson was honored guest at a business men's luncheon given on November 24 at the Chamber of Commerce.

INDIANAPOLIS

A petition for the appointment of a receiver for the Apex Pictures Corporation of Indianapolis has been filed in Superior Court by Raymond L. Pleak, who charges that the company is insolvent and owes him $952.25, including interest for advances made to meet the company's pay rolls. The company for a time made one and two-reel comedies.

A reorganization of the staff of the Indianapolis branch of the Robertson-Cole Corporation, following the resignation of Manager C. W. Tyler to become manager of the Special Pictures Corporation in Cincinnati, sees W. G. Carter, formerly with Select Pictures in St. Louis, at the helm. J. L. McCurdy, Northern Indiana salesman, and Frank A. Kopp, booker of the old organization, remain with the new outfit. New faces in the sales staff include W. J. Lee, formerly with Hallmark at Cincinnati, who has Southeastern Indiana and Eastern Kentucky; George Vivian Smith, formerly with the Special Pictures Corporation at Cincinnati, who is in the Northwestern Indiana territory, and J. F. McGrail, formerly with the Gus Sun booking office in Indianapolis, assigned to Southwestern Indiana and Western Kentucky.

Indianapolis has a case on record wherein adverse criticism of the morals of a play proved bad instead of good for the box-office. Local movie men watched the event with interest. The play was the famous "Aphrodite," being shown at the Murat, legitimate, the week of November 23.

On the morning of November 23 the secretary of the Indianapolis Church Federation entered a protest against the show with the prosecuting attorney, pointing out as the chief objectionable matter the scene in which McKay Morris and Dorothy Dalton cut some passionate didos. The prosecuting attorney suggested that the show ought to be censored.

The newspapers spread out with the tale, and every showman in town thought that "Aphrodite" was going to be the mecca for all Hoosierdom through the week. It is reported that the Murat issued paper to half the county and city administrations, not to mention a number of prominent churchmen and they all flocked to see the fun. But when the newspaper men went to check up the only criticism they could find was the assertion of one official that the crucifixion of a slave girl in one scene made him "sick to his stomach."

The wind went out of "Aphrodite's" sails thereupon. Few cared to pay the highest prices of the season to see a show in which not even the secretary of the Church Federation could find something to kick about.

DETROIT

Al. Rheinhold and Carl Zimmer have leased the Gladwin Park theatre. Gus Greening continues at manager. No change in policy is anticipated.

A new theatre for Grand River avenue at the Boulevard, opposite the Ferry Field, is being promoted by Thomas J. Penniman, assistant corporation counsel of Detroit, and one of the original stockholders in the Ferry Field. The house plans call for 3,000 seats and a block of stores and apartments. The company is to be capitalized for $1,000,000.

J. M. Duncan, who has been in charge of the Detroit Vitagraph exchange for five years, has just been appointed district manager, embracing the territory included in the Detroit, Minneapolis, Omaha and Chicago exchanges. He will be succeeded by J. H. Young, city salesman for Vitagraph, who has been connected with this exchange for the past year.

The new Riveria theatre at Niles opened on Thanksgiving Day with Earle Williams in "The Purple Cipher." The house seats 1,000 and is managed by John Bingemer.

The Majestic theatre has changed its policy and is now offering two distinct programs weekly, changing on Sunday and Thursday.

Art Hoganson of the Pathe offices, has resigned to become booking manager of the Koppin circuit of local houses.

Elmer R. Pearson, director of Pathe exchanges, was a Detroit visitor for two days last week.

Will M. Elliott, managing director of the Majestic theatre, who has been seriously ill, has recovered sufficiently to give some time to the theatre each day.

Syd Hackford, recently with the Select exchange, has returned to the Universal exchange, handling the west side of Detroit.

George H. Rowell has left Vitagraph to become a Pathe salesman and will cover a part of the state on features.

PORTLAND, ORE.

"Orchestraless days" is the latest fashion in Portland, Ore. War may have caused the sugarless days of former times, but it is cessation of hostilities and a treaty of peace which has brought on this new "less" day. When the final settlement was made by Jensen and Von Herberg with union musicians of the Northwest it was agreed that during the coming two years practically the same wages will be paid, but they will be for a six day and not a seven day week as before. The Columbia theatre of Portland will not have any orchestra music on Monday, while Wednesday will be the period at the Peoples theatre when the orchestral organ alone will be featured. To some extent, theatre owners believe, it will now be possible to determine which type of music the general public does want in motion picture houses.

John R. Britz has been appointed leader of the Peoples theatre orchestra. Mr. Britz was brought out to Portland last season to be leader of a musical comedy stock company. He was formerly on the road with orchestras for John Cort, Klaw and Erlanger, H. W. Savage and other prominent producers.

John G. Von Herberg spent several days in Portland visiting C. S. Jensen, senior member of the firm of Jensen and Von Herberg, operators of 27 theatres throughout the Northwest. Von Herberg is a stock fancier, and the occasion of this Portland visit was the International Livestock annual exhibition in Portland. He was accompanied back to Seattle by Gus Metzger, owner of the Rivoli theatre of Portland.

Popular demand changed all November Columbia theatre bookings. Although the majority of Columbia attractions are held 10 days or two weeks, "Behold My Wife" was booked for but one week. Every arrangement was made to change the production at the end of the week and replace it with Marion Davies in "The Restless Sex." But block long queues, two deep, forming every night despite unusual Oregon rains, forbade the closing of "Behold My Wife," which is now well along in its second week and "still going strong." Eighteen days is the record first run in Portland.

The most popular musical attraction yet put on in any Portland house was the Portland police quartet which sang by special dispensation of the chief of police and mayor in the Liberty theatre for a week's engagement. During that week a spectacular hold-up in which a police officer sacrificed his life led to numerous city clubs praising the Portland police force. The applause the quartet received was something amazing. The act was put on in connection with William S. Hart's police story, "The Cradle of Courage."

A full page cover of "Screenland," the 16-page magazine distributed weekly in the five Portland houses of Jensen and Von Herberg, was last week devoted to an art picture of Carmel Myers. The cover was in three colors.

The Milo Merry Minstrel troupe of six persons will form an extra attraction at the Star theatre when the picture, "King Spruce" appears on the screen of that house. Ralph Winsor, manager of the Star, put over Olive Thomas's last production, "Darling Mine," with unusual success, part of which he attributes to a lavish lobby built for the picture. He laid great stress when giving plans for the Olive Thomas lobby that everything in its make-up should carry dignity and beauty. No mention was made of the star's unhappy death.

Edward Armstrong, district manager of Universal, arrived in Portland last week en route to San Francisco, where he expected to meet the general manager from the big "U" offices. Mr. Armstrong expressed himself as immensely pleased with the Portland exchange, which since its reorganization less than one month ago has increased its general business more than 33 per cent. John Brill, from New York, is now in charge of the Portland Universal exchange.

At the last meeting of the Motion Picture League of Oregon, A. C. Raleigh, manager of the Columbia theatre, was appointed chairman of a special committee to raise more funds to be used by the league in fighting the Sunday closing law throughout the State. Mr. Raleigh has decided upon a huge motion picture ball and is already writing and wiring to Los Angeles, making arrangements for all stars not working during the second or third weeks of December to come to Portland as honor guests of the league.

Earl Brownlee has taken over the motion picture department of the "Journal," the largest afternoon newspaper of Portland, Ore. This department was formerly under the direction of Sam

ABOUT DIRECTORS

CHARLES A. MILLER, chairman of the Committee in Charge of the M. P. D. A. "Progress of the Art" dinner, which will be held at the Hotel Biltmore on December 7, to be attended by executives of the motion picture producing and kindred industries, as well as the heads of financial organizations, authors, editors and playwrights, states that he needs a new kind of megaphone to call that committee on the lot. For instance, there is George Irving, directing Mollie King; Charles Giblyn, who makes feature pictures for Fox; J. Searle Dawley, directing Pearl White at present, for Fox, and Ashley Miller, of the Community Pictures Corporation. "Try and get them together all at once—especially in the day time," declares the chairman. The life of a motion picture director is obviously a busy one. There was a special meeting of M. P. D. A. held on Tuesday night, the last preceding the dinner.

Kenneth Harlan will be seen as Constance Talmadge's new leading man in "The Man From Toronto," directed by Chet Withey, a play by Douglas Murray, adapted for the screen by Grant Carpenter, who has also been engaged to write the continuity for "A Butterfly in Harness," by Frederick and Fanny Hatton, Mr. Withey's next picture, starring Constance Talmadge.

Others included in the cast of "The Man From Toronto" are George Fawcett, James Harrison, Flora Finch, W. R. Webb and Florence Short.

William D. Taylor faced the motion camera as an actor for the first time in seven years this week. The noted director played the name part in "Captain Alvarez" for Vitagraph in 1913. Edith Storey was his leading lady and the late Myrtle Gonzalez was the heavy. (It was even before they called 'em "vamps.") The occasion of Taylor's reversion to type was the filming of an "Around the Lot" feature in which he was the principal role.

Judge Ben Lindsay, the famous juvenile jurist of Denver, who played a prominent part in William D. Taylor's production of "The Soul of Youth," wrote his erstwhile director that he was the only Democrat elected in the Colorado elections in a ten-to-one Republican landslide.

One of Carl Laemmle's first actions on arrival at Universal City was to congratulate Tod Browning for producing "Outside the Law" at a cost of only a few ten thousands over $250,000. Mr. Browning completed cutting his big crook drama in time to show it to Mr. Laemmle before the final titling is done.

Gordon Standing, who appears in "The Foreigner"

"Tod, it is a fine picture," Mr. Laemmle is quoted as saying. "But how did you get the mayor of San Francisco to let you hold up business on four blocks in Chinatown while you smashed windows and broke the city's electric light globes and messed everything up? Tell me that?"

Whereupon Tod Browning explained that 'Frisco's Chinatown was duplicated right on the lot for the purpose. It has since been torn down.

Modernity's trend seems to bring the disappearance of conventional appurtenances. For illustration, the Haig and Haigless bar, bobbed hair and now, according to a communication from Philip E. Rosen, director at Metro's west coast studios, the queueless Chinaman.

When Mr. Rosen sought six Celestials for his all-star production of "What's the Matter With Marriage?" he was unable to find them with queues. He finally had to take his half-dozen oriental recruits and provide them with wigs and queues. The incident, by the way, tempted Mr. Rosen to be epigrammatic.

"Engaging Chinamen," he said, speaking in a voice slightly louder than his usual, for there were several friends in the offing, "is like directing actors who've prepared their parts hastily. After you ask me why, I say, you know: 'Because you have to give them their queues.'"

John L. McCutcheon, director of "Determination," is now at work on some unusually fine night and fog exteriors.

Bernard Randall, who has had a wide and enviable experience on both stage and screen, is playing the part of Dean the Deacon, the "master mind" of the band of international crooks in the production.

Since the greater part of the photoplay is laid in the Whitechapel district of London, the city noted for its drizzly weather, these fog scenes form an important part of the camerawork.

The exteriors, which include block after block of London streets, are the work of Technical Director Herbert Messmore, who has done some notable work in this line.

Present schedule calls for "Determination" to be ready for titling and cutting by the first of the year, so that the picture may be released early in February.

ABOUT PLAYERS

Peggy Shanor, who recently joined the George B. Seitz company, now engaged in making a serial under Pathe banner, feels much at home in the new work, for it so happens: That once, when Peggy was playing in another serial, same George B. Seitz was her director or her leading man, and this time he is leading man or director. It would take a rather fast count to follow George B. Most of the time he is both leading man, director and any thing else needed to keep the production turning out on time. But, when Peggy played with John Barrymore, Harry Semels was also in the cast, and in the production now in an interesting episode, he is the villain who pursues. In this episode, Peggy is a "Sky Girl"—not a "sky higher," but a Greek goddess, and the daughter of Mars or some other than a movie "star." Besides, she aviates in another episode and does everything which has heretofore not been done in a serial. The contrast between dainty, blonde petite June Caprice and Miss Shanor's raven statuesque beauty leads to the query of when will the first three episodes be shown? A regular family party, and a regular George B. Seitz cast.

Among the newest and most celebrated members of the Actors' Equity Association from the motion picture fold is Mollie King, who in private life is Mrs. Kenneth Alexander, and hails from the famous King family most ably described as one of beauty, brains and talent. Miss Mollie is a famed artist of great beauty, Miss Nellie is known for her business ability, level head and attractiveness; then Charlie—who made a name for himself years ago in musical comedy and vaudeville more recently, appearing "In Buddies," is representative of the King talent. And each of them may claim a share of the other's particular attribute. More power to Equity!

William H. Tooker, whose portraval of the role of the minister, "The Stealers," Robertson-Cole, was widely commended, has temporarily forsaken his usual benign characterizations to portray a blasé and villainous parent in the forthcoming Selznick picture, starring Eugene O'Brien, which is titled "Worlds Apart."

The entire company of players have recently returned from Warrenton, Va., after a week of combined pleasure and work, in the making of some thrilling fox hunt scenes. It is said that more realistic hunt scenes have never been seen on the screen.

In season, Warrenton is the center of attraction for those who enjoy fox hunting and many journey from different parts of the country to take part in the exciting chase of the elusive Reynard. One remarkable shot is said to have caught a fox brought to bay by the hounds, directly in front of the camera.

In this well balanced cast, under the direction of Alan Crosland, Olive Tell plays opposite Mr. O'Brien and the support includes William H. Tooker, Florence Billings, Arthur Houseman, Warren Cook, Louise Prussing and Bigelow Cooper. The story, written by John Lynch, was adapted for the screen by the R. Cecil Smiths.

Another personal appearance. Now it comes out that Virginia Lee, who is creating the part of Beatrice Harlowe in "Scrambled Wives," will be the guest of honor at the convention of Maryland Exhibitors, held in Baltimore. The selection of Miss Lee, who has appeared as the star in only one production up to the present writing, Burton King's "Love or Money," is an unusual tribute to the popularity which this comely leading woman has attained. In addition to attending the State convention, Miss Lee will also lead the grand march at the annual ball of the Maryland Exhibitors' Association with the Governor of the state, which function will take place at the largest armory hall in Baltimore.

Betty Blythe, famous as a beauty, horsewoman and motorist of the Hollywood film colony, has added charioteering to her accomplishments. For the historic spectacle in which she appears as Queen of Sheba, Miss Blythe refused a "double" and practiced until she could drive her royal chariot in a stirring race. The star declares the modern girl who can drive her car and 'plane has nothing on Sheba's famous queen. There's no thrill like that of exceeding the speed limit in a chariot drawn by four white horses. We have Miss Blythe's word for it.

June Caprice, who will be seen in the Pathe release, "Rogues and Romance," the six-reel feature made almost together in genuine Spanish locale, is eagerly awaiting the day after Christmas showing which will depict happenings in Spain, where she spent last summer. In the story, Miss Caprice, of dainty, blonde and blue-eyed beauty, "tumbles in love" with a Spainard. All the time she is infatuated with him, however, she really loves the American hero, who, in the end, claims the heart-whole and hand of the diminutive June. Harry Semels plays the Spaniard to perfection, it is said, and to the relief of Miss Caprice who did not enjoy the mob scenes, supposedly revolutions, in which many Spanish types were introduced. A sub-title, which points to the Statue of Liberty as if "don't trifle with Uncle Sam" is said to express the feelings Miss Caprice accurately, and that she was of that country so greatly respected by all others, gave her a thrill when she came back, which, she states she never did get in a movie.

Antonio Moreno is about to realize his cherished ambition, that of making a picture in his native Spain. Senor Tony has left serials to star in special Vitagraph productions. The first "Three Sevens," by Perley Poore Sheehan, is now being produced with Chester Bennett directing. Early in the new year Tony plans to leave for Spain to visit his mother and to film a big Spanish story.

Robert Schable, playing the heavy lead in "Temple Dusk," a George D. Baker production, being made at Metro's Sixty-first street studio, was the victim of noisy circumstances late one evening as closeups and semi-closeups were being taken of him. Schable's head was bandaged, and was supposed to be aching violently as the result of the hero's successfully mixing it with him. Closeups and semi-closeups were being shot in rapid succession of Schable in this mournful state. And all the time, workmen were rushing the demolishment of the set, in order to erect a hurry-up set at once. Bob had little trouble registering pain. But when he was called upon to answer the telephone and evince pleasure at an imaginary conversation, the shouts of the workmen, resounding hammer blows, and the crash of falling lumber tended to interfere. Schable did his best to ignore bedlam, and Director Baker pronounced the shots "the best yet."

Edward Jobson, prominent member of Metro's West Coast stock company, has a little niece, Bobby, of whom he is very fond.

Little Bobby never misses an opportunity of seeing her big "Unc' Ed" on the screen. In one of his recent pictures, Mr. Jobson enacted the part of a good-natured butler, whose chief occupation consisted of furnishing amusement to the little daughter of his lord and master.

Bobby chanced to view this picture one day, and was very quiet throughout the show. After it was over, her mother asked her what she thought of it.

"I finked it was pretty, but Unc' Ed didn't see me at all. I waved twice at him 'n he just kept on petting that other little girl."

Genius in The Making

GENIUS has been defined—many times—as nothing more or less than the capacity for taking infinite pains. But has anyone ever found a real test for genius? We like to say this or that director is a genius and we credit him with continued successful effort. He may, however, be merely fortunate. We can seldom, if ever, prove that he is a genius. One director may have a tremendously extravagant organization back of him. If he wants a Turkish rug or a Sevres vase, he may have it. If he wants the services of any one of a dozen stars, he only has to signify his wishes. Yet in point of ability, he may rank no better than any of a hundred directors, who, if they had the opportunity, could excel or at least equal him.

Not that one is of sufficient authority to say that David G. Fischer is or is not a genius. He has, however, accomplished something rather rare in the history of pictures. He has no organization in the customary sense of the word. He has no studio of his own. Types and actors he can get, of course, but from a limited circle. And he has no corps of assistants, no costume department, no world famous artist to design his sets. He has had to be on the job or on many of them, himself. And yet he is creating a superlative photoplay, one which many directors would not attempt without the support of one of the great producing companies.

"Dave" is a modest, diffident chap. He will talk about his picture, his company, the incidents of production, but not of himself. "'In the Shadow of the Dome,' my present picture, covers more ground and aims at bigger effects than nine-tenths of the average program pictures," he recently said. "Although it is not a great human drama, a war picture, nor a spectacle. It is a story of political Washington. It has to do with real Congressmen and real Senators, actual situations such as happen at the capitol every day during the political year. And we've gone to Washington to take it. We've filmed the Capitol, the House, the Senate, the White House and other public buildings. We've gone to aviation stations to get aviation pictures, and we went into the heart of the south to get scenes in the hero's early life, before he went to Washington as a Congressman. And we came to New York to shoot New York scenes. Somewhere in Jersey wasn't good enough for us.

"Furthermore we have broken entirely away from the idea that an independently produced picture must be rushed through quickly, that the only way to make money out of a free-lance venture is to save everywhere. We have spent nearly four months in the actual taking. We have over 60,000 feet of negative to cut to eight reels. And as far as actors are concerned, when we wanted a type we went out and got it. We didn't let an agent offer us half a dozen actors from which to choose. We ransacked the profession until we got what we wanted. When we were in Berryville, Va., taking exteriors, we paid the entire population of the town to play for us, and we took some shots of types such as no agent in New York or Los Angeles could ever find."

Created without the aid of an organization, this picture will perhaps stamp David G. Fischer as one of the coming young directors of the art. His past successes are "The Law of Nature," "Ambition," "Where Bonds are Loosed" and many others which he declares are but milestones on the path which has led to "In the Shadow of the Dome," under his directorial hand.

Gina Relly to Appear in French Film

Gina Relly, the dainty French actress, who was brought to this country last spring and made her American debut in "The Face At Your Window," (Fox) has signed a contract with the French Pathe Company to appear in a series of productions to be made abroad during 1921, according to a cabled communication.

Work on the first, "The Emperor of the Poor" was adapted for the screen from the story of the same name by Monsieur Champsaur, the well known French author, is already begun.

The cast supporting Miss Relly is headed by Mathot, French actor, who played the featured role in "The Count of Monte Christo," the French Pathe super-production last year.

Gina Relly has appeared in leading and stellar roles for the French Pathe Company prior to her visit to this country and is well known to the stage and screen audiences of England and France.

She was selected for "The Emperor of the Poor" by the author who spent many months in searching for the type he required to delineate the heroine of his story. He had seen Miss Relly on the screen several times and immediately sought her out upon her return from America.

Mlle. Relly who is eighteen years of age made her debut on the speaking stage in Paris during the war. She played in repertoire at the Apollo Capucines in Paris until a year and a half ago when she received her first screen contract with Pathe.

For Example—Director Hugo Ballin

THE ultimate values of all screen-lore are the creative values and they reside in the genius of the director. The motion picture is rooted too deeply in human psychology to apprehend a permanent dislodgement, but it has its fluctuations, and we all know that it is the upward trend which makes for prosperity. It seems then a natural inference that the best way to speculate on the future of our art is to x-ray the directorial mind—an achievement of no small difficulty for singularly enough the mind which creates and recreates life on the screen, is often inarticulate when it comes to words. Directors, it is true have been posed for interviews designed mainly to promote the sale of certain pictures, but this is scarcely the way to gather worthwhile revelations from the director's soul.

Now, therefore, when a young director rises to remark—"We must go to our public with a new appeal," he is entitled to attention. Let not the reader be alarmed; the statement quoted comes from a man to whom preaching and moralizing is an abomination, a man who in an unusual degree possesses that rarest of quality among artists the Humility of Mind. He is a man who entered the motion picture field after achieving a career as a painter, whose measure of success is quite clearly indicated by the fact that his masterpiece is in the National Museum at Washington, that many public buildings and private residences have been adorned by him with mural paintings; those in the city capitol of Wisconsin having attained no little fame.

Speaking to a friend some few days ago in his home at Lexington avenue (rich in well selected objects of art), Mr. Hugo Ballin spoke of present-day screen-lore and of the screen-lore of tomorrow.

"Like other forms of art, the motion picture has gone through a cycle of changes. I do not mean to analyze the past any further than to say that we have had too much of mere action or I should say too much of mere movement; too much of the circus and too little of the temple of art. We have been whipping and beating the surface without going beneath the surface for the deeper things which mean more than mere motion and action and which interest and fascinate the human mind. It is scarcely necessary to elaborate my meaning, but I may add that we have come to the point where the heroine has been ready to jump off the cliff too often. What we ought to do now is to keep the heroine away from the cliff and interpret her just as a human being undergoing such struggles as may be part of our own daily experience. The old molds are worn out to the breaking point. We must create new ones. I think that the return to the primitive, a return to introspection, a return to the portrayal of soul-realism, will find a ready and appreciative public. You may call this modernizing the motion picture; you may say that in this way we will attune the motion picture with the best and finest there is in contemporaneous literature—words of description after all mean very little."

Here Mr. Ballin interrupted himhimself, while his visitor looked about the little library in which the conversation was being carried on. The room was filled with precious mementos of Italy, many of them pictorial collections of the great cities of that historic land—probably the most complete which is to be found on this side of the water. Mr. Ballin had spent years of his life in Italy and he carried away with him spiritual treasures of no mean proportion. This too will appear again and again in his works of the future. He talked of some of the noted beauty spots of Italy, so many of them historic, but alas, as far as human creations are concerned, falling into piteous ruin and decay.

"Have you been through the Villa d'Este?" Mr. Ballin asked.

"Yes," replied the visitor, and spoke of the dazzling splendors of doorless rooms, storing untold artistic values, pretty statuary, marvelous fountains, and glorious terraces, all neglected and abandoned.

"You carried away then a feeling of sadness as you left the place," said Mr. Ballin.

The visitor replied in the affirmative. Mr. Ballin's eyes lighted up and he remarked: "Well, if I can show or reproduce the sad splendors of the Villa in motion pictures and create in your mind the same feeling that came over you on the spot, then I have accomplished one of the objects that I propose to strive for in my pictures. It is to let the thing itself speak, to rouse and stimulate thought in the public and to help it to entertain itself."

It is expected that Mr. Ballin's screen career in the future will be closely intertwined with the future of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, through whom he is releasing his productions, for both Mr. Ballin and Mr. Hodkinson have much in common. They are both actuated by the same motives and the same ideals—and that they will achieve those ideals is almost a foregone conclusion for they are both men of strong purpose and ability.

Storm Entertains Lillian Gish Company

Turkey dinner on a hard working holiday! Sounds good enough to eat. So thought the guests of Jerome Storm, who entertained the Lillian Gish Company at Thanksgiving dinner, on the day some folks like to celebrate at home. If one of that kind, do not envy the lowly motion picture star or director, but heed what happened.

Account of unavoidable delays, it was necessary to make Thanksgiving an illegal working day. Director Jerome Storm and his star, Lillian Gish, commemorated Thanksgiving by working from nine in the morning until six at night. And, not a grumble from any member of the company. In fact, it was a gala occasion. Mr. Storm entertained. His guests, seated upon "the set" were (guest of honor) Lillian Gish, but the kind of honored guest who waited upon the table. Sounds like a "movie tale." James Abbe, noted New York photographer took a picture of the assembly, Camera-man George Peters made a movie of it and Mr. Storm tugged at one end of the wish bone, while Miss Gish put forth her best efforts to get the end she desired. But the luck broke even. Thus, Mr. Storm gained a day's work and the endorsement of all concerned!

Gaston Glass and "The Divine Sarah"

Gaston Glass, soon to be seen in "The Foreigner," the first of the Ralph Connor stories to be filmed, and now ready for release, has been in Canada for nearly four months. Following "The Foreigner," in which he played the title role, he was held in Canadian locale for a second film version of a Ralph Connor novel, widely read and under the original title "Cameron of the Royal Mounted."

After following Glass about over Greater New York, thence to Canada, a letter addressed to the young French actor finally reached him at McLeod. It was delivered just before he was called for a scene. The postmark "Paris, France," caused Glass to excitedly tear open the envelope. His face needed no studio lighting as he read:

"How may one send—what you call a—cable from this—pardon—place—I mean location country?" Glass inquired. "I want to send money to France—toot sweet."

Naturally acquired friends in the company gathered 'round. They hoped young Cameron had received no bad news. He assured them, on the contrary, he had been paid a fitting tribute. It developed the letter was from the "Orphanage of the French Art Society," of which Mme. Sarah Bernhardt is a director. She is also Gaston's godmother. He wished to respond immediately. It was explained to Mr. Glass that cable charges on a substantial amount would aggregate a fair contribution in itself and that it would be wiser to cable an appreciation of their recognition, stating letter containing contribution to follow. It did not meet with Gaston's idea of "speed," but he acted accordingly.

Following his next scene Director MacRae, who has directed both the Connor stories of Canadian locale mentioned, was heard to say:

"Glass improves with every scene. His work indicates that he expects to make sufficient money over here to support half the charity organizations in Paris." Which speaks volumes in favor of the popular French actor.

Vignola Inventor of "Still Continuity"

CARRYING deep significance for the exhibitors, the newspapers and magazines, and the publicity departments because it revolutionizes the entire system of making "stills" of productions, Robert G. Vignola, director of special productions for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, announces his own invention and the newest thing in modern studio efficiency, the "still continuity."

The idea was first put to practical use a year ago by Mr. Vignola when he made his first special for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, "The World and His Wife." It proved so successful that he tried it again with "The Passionate Pilgrim," his subsequent production. And then, to make sure that it was practical and of great value, he used it with "The Manifestation of Henry Ort," his third special just completed. Having found it entirely successful, he now reveals the idea for the benefit of the industry, incidentally unfolding the secret of the unusual and remarkably effective "stills" he has turned out with his productions in the past.

"The 'still continuity' is a little brother to the production continuity," said Mr. Vignola. "It serves the same purpose with regard to still pictures as the production continuity does with the main production. The production continuity, as every one knows, is a written sequence of scenes—the play manuscript, if you will,—which guides the director in his work and without which, unless he himself were the author, he could not make a picture.

"The 'still continuity' is practically the same thing differing from the other continuity only in the fact that it guides the director in the taking of still pictures, whereas the other guides the director in the taking of motion pictures.

"Here's the way it works out: When the scenario writer turns the finished scenario over to me I go into consultation with the publicity department and proceed personally to make a 'still continuity' of the salient scenes in the story. In this way I am sure of the kind of stills I am going to have long before I begin the production. This 'still continuity' takes its place with the main continuity enabling me to keep track of what scenes to take stills of and what not.

"It is a simple method of tested efficiency and success, and I am offering it with my compliments to my fellow directors for whatever they think it is worth to them. The still picture is of such great importance that it behooves no director to slight it. It is because I personally attach so much value to the still that I invented the 'still continuity.'"

Critics Praise Baker's Genius

SELDOM has a director received such lavish praise as has been bestowed upon George D. Baker for his brilliant work in the production of his latest success, "Heliotrope," for which he wrote the continuity as well as personally directing the feature. In direction, continuity, comedy relief and sustained suspense, "Heliotrope" ranks as one of the finest pictures of the past two years and its success stamps George D. Baker as a worthy occupant of the Motion Picture Hall of Fame. Beatrice Fairfax eulogized "Heliotrope" by saying: "It is the greatest drama of father love ever shown upon the screen. Heliotrope is dominated by masterly direction and creative story-telling construction." The Exhibitors' Trade Review heralds it by saying: "George D. Baker has done himself proud with this one. The continuity is perfect and the interest holds until the last scene. It has everything a box-office winner cashes in on, one of the best bets of the season." Lawrence Reid avers that, "George D. Baker's production of Richard Washburn Child's story is certain to arouse discussion. In the first place the director deserves credit for what he has left out as much as for what he has incorporated. Heliotrope is a different picture. It carries power and pathos—reality and tragedy." Wid's remarks: "The direction of 'Heliotrope' is up to Baker's standard; at times unusually excellent. A splendid production of an unusual theme." Mr. Baker is now engaged in completing the latest George D. Baker Production based on the story "Temple Dusk," which he believes will excel the favorable impression made by his work in the direction of his present success. "Temple Dusk" will be released by Metro under the auspices of the Sawyer-Lubin organization, who are advertising it as a special George D. Baker Production. The cast selected by Mr. Baker for "Temple Dusk" is headed by Anna Q. Nilsson and Robert Fraser.

Final "Fade Out" of "The Stealers," showing Myrtle Morse, the "Cabanne find," and William H. Tooker

Myrtle Morse A Christy Cabanne Find

When Christie Cabanne was about to "shoot" at the end of preparatory stages of the Robertson-Cole special, "The Stealers"—he was ready except a long looked for actress to play a part having an important bearing upon the story. Those who had been sent him, for various reasons failed to fill the bill. Finally, having noticed a certain Myrtle Morse, who had said she was content to be an "extra," with a view to laying a firm foundation for a screen career, Mr. Cabanne asked to have the young lady presented again. "Would you play a part instead of the work you were engaged for?" asked the director. And with due honesty Miss Morse replied, "I would if I could." "You can," was the director's reply. And so it was ordered. As a bride, and in the attire identified with wealth and position, Miss Morse screened like a bridal rose and the director said all those complimentary things directors do say, when an accidental "find" is found, pointed out and discovered to have ability. Mr. Cabanne found much to be thankful for. Versatility is one of the things he wished to find most. That Miss Morse, made to look twenty years older, and holding her place in the picture to the final fade out, filled the need of "just such a girl" has already brought offers for parts little dreamed of when she entered the motion picture field, via the old road called "Extra Way." The slender lines, dark eyes and black hair which made Miss Morse appear as a beautiful young bride, were also made to look the part where she is supposedly a much

Director Dinner Causes Humorous Contention

It is known to the motion picture trade and kindred press, that on the evening of December 7, at the Hotel Biltmore, the fourth annual dinner of the Motion Picture Directors' Association will take place. It has also been announced that many of the coast members of M. P. D. A., at present in New York, will be on hand. The coast lodge, to be officially represented by Charles Giblyn, has been the foundation of an amusing controversy. It appears the publications in which the notices appeared, are earnestly read by directors. There were a few members of New York lodge of M. P. D. A. who disputed that Mr. Giblyn is a member on the coast, rather t in New York. It makes no difference except that a members' dues support the order to which he belongs. Mr. Giblyn attends in New York, and when approached to settle the discussion he said:

"A man is a Mason, if he is a Mason—in Asia Minor—or anywhere—on location. A Knight of Columbus took more advantage of being one while he was in France than ever before in his life. It makes no difference where a man belongs—the question is—does he belong?"

The same is true of George L. Sargent, who belongs on the coast, but being marooned in New York attends lodge accordingly. Robert G. Vignola, on the other hand, was on the coast for many months, yet still retained his New York membership. There are a number of coast members in New York who attend lodge faithfully, but Mr. Giblyn being an active member instigated the controversy. The coast wins! No wonder they can boast of building a new club house. New York had a studio first! Mr. Giblyn will settle the argument by joining New York lodge, too. And the dinner preparations are daily growing more interesting.

older woman. With a make-up skill, like unto an actress of many times her experience, which she mastered after once having been told "how," Miss Morse appeared, blossoming, young and attractive in the extreme in the first of the picture, and made the changes required to fit the part of "twenty years later" with surprising accuracy. "A sense of logic is as necessary as a sense of humor in any kind of work," commented the "over-night actress," when discussing her sudden success. "One needs both, but with an absorbing desire to 'make good,' it would have taken something more than learning to adjust make-up to have stopped me."

So much for Myrtle Morse, a Christy Cabanne discovery!

Listening to the Suggestions of Theatre Patrons

The Audience Has a Chance to Tell What It Likes in Theatres

IN a recent contest carried on by the Photoplay magazine, the thousands of theatregoers who read the publication were invited to reveal their likes and dislikes in motion picture theatres. The results as finally compiled may be considered as a fairly accurate indication of national sentiment inasmuch as replies were received from all the states. What at first seems strange—and yet on second thought does not—is the uniformity of ideas submitted, which goes to prove the sameness of human nature everywhere.

The writer from up north where the winters flirt with zero temperatures, pleads the need of adequate ventilation as strongly as her sister from Texas. And the housewife from the Carolinas is as insistent as her cousin three thousand miles away in California that her theatre seats be roomy and comfortable.

A perusal of the replies of these "fans" is of value in this section inasmuch as many of their thoughts pertained to equipment. For instance, one reader sets forth her convictions as follows:

. . . The theatre itself needs:
Wider seats and more space between rows.
Better indirect ventilation.
More thought and money expended on restful and harmonious coloring.
A creche where children under four can be cared for largely by school girls paid with free tickets.
A box into which requests and criticisms may be dropped.
A tearoom where young people might meet for dancing or other social affairs.
And last, the very best line of plays I could possibly afford. . . .

Another letter submitted gives a slightly different line-up, viz.:

. . . I would consider these two big essentials the foundation for success. First, the selection of only high-class pictures, and second, the faultless presentation of same by means of a perfect screen and up-to-date equipment in projection room. These two essentials should be combined with the following refinements:
Extra fine ventilation.
Comfortable seats—wide enough that your neighbor's elbows will not encroach on your territory, and spaced far enough between rows so that your knees and feet will not suffer as your neighbor goes past you to his seat.
Music—interpretive—yet not obtrusive.
Attractive lobby.

The surprising slant of these and other replies was the placing of suitable equipment at the head of the list. This condition shows a great change on the part of the audience since the days of the store show. Then, the picture was everything; comfort was secondary. Competition and greater discrimination on the part of patrons have been two of the causes for the change. The successful exhibitor of this day must cater to his audience with quality pictures and quality comfort and one is almost on a par with the other.

Referring back to the first letter printed it is to be noticed that the writer calls for wider seats with more space between rows. The custom of setting rows 26 or 28 inches apart is disappearing. No man or woman can enjoy a picture with his or her knees wedged tightly against the seat in front. Thirty inches is a minimum row clearance; 31 or 32 inches would be still better.

Other exhibitors, in an effort to compress the greatest number of seats between walls, have caused the width of the seats to be made too narrow for comfort. There is as much call for shoulder room as limb room.

The second item in the first letter mentions better ventilation. This criticism cannot be applied so frequently to theatres built during the last two years. Before that time, however, there was an era of misinformation on this subject of ventilation. Side wall fans had a vogue, and while they gave the appearance and feel of ventilation, they merely chopped up and agitated the air. No fresh air was supplied except unintentionally through the opening and closing of doors.

A little later, ventilating systems designed with theatre requirements in mind, made their appearance and altered completely the technique of theatre ventilation. That is why modern theatres can seldom be criticized from this standpoint.

But the older houses are still criminally negligent in this respect, although they are gradually coming to see the light.

Thus we see that the two foremost criticisms pertain to theatre equipment. When these points are looked after and made satisfactory the greatest problems of the exhibitor in his desire to make his theatre comfortable and attractive have been overcome.

Now turning our attention to the second list of suggestions, we find mention for the first time of the need for excellent projection. The non-appearance of this important adjunct in the first list was not because of its unimportant part but because all too often the projection is taken for granted.

Projection is one part of theatre exhibiting which still remains a mystery to the theatregoer. He sees every other part; only projection is hidden. Therefore, if the screen shows a poorly projected pic-

Bakersfield's New Theatre Takes High Rank in Beauty

"California" Is a Superior House for Town of Only 18,000

TO Bakersfield, California, with a population of 18,000 odd, goes the credit of having what many have termed "America's most beautiful small town theatre." The accompanying illustrations give a fair idea of the beauty of the Grogg Amusement Company's new California theatre, a handsome edifice which sets a standard for theatre construction which few small cities have attained. Experts claim that there is not a technical mistake in the entire building, and most interesting about this is the fact that it was designed by an architect who has never before built a theatre. The seating arrangement, the acoustics, the stage, the lighting effects and the projection are without flaw.

A plain but elegant note has been struck in the architecture, and this quiet elegance impresses one throughout the theatre. The exterior has been done in the handsome Spanish stucco finish, typical of the early California missions.

As one steps into the foyer he is impressed by a homelike atmosphere. Luxurious carpets, fine tapestries, and beautiful lighting fixtures have been chosen to give the patron his first impression.

Fine, upholstered seats fill the auditorium and in the fore part of the balcony there are several rows of comfortable loge chairs. There is a grand stairway leading from either side of the foyer which lands on a spacious mezzanine floor. Here is the women's retiring room, richly furnished in period style. The colorings of dull rose, taupe and old blue blend in the draperies and furnishings. From each side of the mezzanine landing, a graduated slope takes the patrons into the balcony, eliminating the unpopular stairway climb.

In the dome of the theatre there are four large grills, over which the typhoon cooling system is built. A water-wash system cleanses and freshens the air before it is drawn into the theatre. Equal care has been given to insure the comfort of the California's patrons during the cold months through the means of a fine steam-heating plant built in the basement of the theatre.

The projection room is in the most desirable place—on the lower floor. Realizing the truth of "it is the picture you are selling," no expense has been spared to secure perfect projection in the new California theatre. Powers machines are used.

The stage is ample for the presentation of road shows or vaudeville, but pictures, prologues, and fine music is the policy. A rose velour front curtain opens and festoons three ways, and is also made to fly. A gold and purple cyclorama, with a canopy effect, frames the picture screen, which is also masked by four huge pillars, scrumbled in gold and black.

The interior walls of the new California are remarkably beautiful. There are three large panels on either side, and these have been painted and stenciled to give the appearance of silk. Under the soft hue of multi-colored lights the effect is exquisite. The colorings of blue, gold and old ivory predominate. A Robert Morton pipe organ, augmented by a string orchestra, give the photoplays proper musical atmosphere.

It looks as though no detail has been overlooked to insure the safety, comfort and enjoyment of the California's patrons.

With the addition of its California theatre the Grogg Amusement Company controls four theatres in Bakersfield. The other three, the Hippodrome, Pastime and Bakersfield theatres, are given to vaudeville, pictures, and road shows respectively.

The Grogg Enterprises were founded by the late Charles Grogg, one of the West's best beloved showmen. The work of furthering his amusement business fell to the hands of his widow, Mrs. Olive Grogg, and to his sister, Miss Sylvia Grogg, who have successfully carried out his dreams and ideals in a beautiful cinema temple which stands as a monument to Mr. Grogg's years of ambitious effort.

Watts Opens Princess in Springfield, Ill.

W. W. WATTS, Springfield's leading exhibitor, has opened his third theatre, the new Princess. The latest acquisition to the city's ranks of film houses is at Fifth and Capitol, in the same location as the old Princess, which Watts secured last January from Kunz Brothers. The new Princess is the largest photoplay theatre in Springfield, having a seating capacity of about 1,400. An immense balcony with wide aisles and plenty of room between the rows of seats provides about 500 choice seats. The loges are arranged so they run from the balcony to the screen and are splendid in their view.

Bullard and Bullard were architects. They have succeeded in giving to the city one of the handsomest playhouses in cen-

The Chair that Eliminated "Rise, Please!"

This illustration shows how Mov-Ezy Chairs operate.

No matter how attractive the theatre, how entertaining the film or how entrancing the music, the theatre is not a perfect success until the bodily comfort of the patrons becomes complete.

Moreover, to become lost in the screen story and then to hear that harsh discordant "Rise, Please," as a late comer enters, destroys the spell and lessens the satisfaction of the patrons.

The use of MOV-EZY chairs means—less time required to fill and empty the theatre;

no crowded aisles;

complete comfort for all;

pleased patrons and bigger box office receipts.

The ARGUS MOV-EZY Swivel-seat CHAIR

prevents this confusion and makes the comfort of the theatre supreme.

When a person enters or leaves a seat in the middle of the row the others in that row do not stand up. They merely turn slightly for an instant and then turn back. No need to gather up wraps and bundles and stand awkwardly as with present style chairs. A slight turn and there is plenty of room to pass. Then there is the Pullman feature—double chair arms on each seat. This means plenty of elbow room. The design of the chair itself insures plenty of foot-room.

How to Produce High Class Lighting Effects

A Description of the Use of Dimmer Equipments in Theatres

OBSERVATION has shown that high class lighting effects on the stage as well as in the auditorium are extremely desirable in any theatre. These effects are not only necessary where legitimate shows are produced but have been found particularly valuable in the moving picture theatre, and in the vaudeville, variety and burlesque house. In fact some of the largest theatre dimmer equipments have been installed in "movies," where the various effects produced are a part of the program and are heartily applauded. The proper color and light setting to go with the scene shown on the screen is as much appreciated as good music setting. It has been found desirable also to gradually increase the brilliancy of the house lights rather than throw them on abruptly after a long period of comparative darkness. In working with the orchestra, too, the theatre electrician and his dimmer equipment are invaluable.

In all theatres, it is important to comply with the Fire Ordinances and maintain a required amount of lighting and when dimmers are used in connection with the house lights they make possible a smooth, evenly dimmed lighting and eliminate the undesirable spotty lighting.

As an example of present day requirements, the Rialto of New York may be ited.

A partial view of the dimmers employed to obtain lighting effects at the New York Rivoli. The slow motion hand wheel is seen at the bottom of the bank. Above the hand wheel in two vertical rows are arranged the master levers. Individual levers are mounted between the rows of dimmers

Details of a Typical Large Equipment

The dimmer bank here is composed of 45 circular plates containing 60 independent individual operating levers. The advantage of obtaining a greater number of independent dimmers than plates lies in the feature of employing (for circuits with a load of 1,800 watts or less), a combination of two dimmers on one plate, i.e., an independent section of resistance on each side of the plate, thereby making two complete dimmers with two operating levers.

Combination Dimmers Most Economical in Space Required

As usual there was but little space on the stage to hold the stage equipment. Only by the use of the combination dimmers described above, was it possible to take care of the 60 dimmers necessary to obtain the most flexible equipment for the purpose outlined.

Each individual operating lever is provided with an indicator equally divided into 14 sections. This feature is of particular value. During the rehearsal the precise degree of illumination is obtained which is best suited for certain occasions; an illumination chart is prepared showing not only the levers to be operated but also the degree on the Indicator to which they are to be placed, which is always alike whenever that particular scene is produced.

The stage proper is divided into four sections controlling amber, red, green and blue colored lamps. Four groups of ten operating levers, each interlocked with a master lever, control the amber, red, blue and green section, making a total of 40 individual operating levers and 4 master levers. The house proper is divided into three sections controlling amber, red and blue colored lamps. Seven operating levers interlocking with a master lever control the blue section and two groups of six operating levers interlocking with a master lever each control the amber and red section, making a total of 19 individual operating levers and three master levers. One dimmer is provided for the orchestra light and is interlocked with the green stage section and master lever. The four stage master levers and the three house master levers are interlocked with a slow motion wheel, making it possible for the operator to control all dimmers by a single action of turning the wheel.

Interesting Interlocking Feature

The individual feature of interest is the interlocking mechanism which is so arranged that any of the seven groups of dimmers can be moved in one direction, while any other group may be moved in the opposite direction, or any color section on the stage or house may be dimmed at the same time any other color section can be brightened by turning the hand-wheel in one direction.

There are 2,600 lamps averaging about 50 watts each which are controlled by the dimmer bank. The peculiar feature of stage control is that right, left and center are on separate dimmer handles, and this also refers to pockets, each of the pockets on the stage being on a separate dimmer with a separate handle, and all of the dimmers being controlled by a master lever.

This is the largest equipment that had ever been placed in a moving picture the-

G-E Compensarcs keep the box office busy

THE theatre that offers its patrons first class films projected without flicker, shut-downs, or annoying waits between reels is the one that draws the largest audiences. People go where they know a quality entertainment can be found and the way in which a picture is shown is quite as important as the picture itself.

G-E Compensarcs by regulating the current supply improve projection so materially that their influence is invariably felt in box office receipts. Their use, furthermore, is an economy and their cost is well within the reach of the smallest theatre.

G-E Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable—G-E offices or distributors everywhere for prompt deliveries and service.

ture, the patron included the poor projection in his criticism that " The picture isn't so very good."

As a matter of fact, theatre exhibiting starts with the projection. A million dollar film can be discounted $950,000 by poor projection. A shaky machine, oil-splotched lenses, incorrectly timed shutters can make faultless photoplays look like the work of amateurs. Yea, verily, along with comfortable seats, adequate ventilation, comes good projection.

All of this is written to show the prominent position played by equipment. Although the big traffic is in films, money is brought into the box office by those features of construction and equipment that have been worked into the theatre and that contribute week after week to the comfort of the man, woman and child attending the playhouse.

tral Illinois. There isn't a pillar or post to mar the view, and comfort has been an uppermost thought in the seating arrangement. Wide aisles, plenty of room between the rows and cosy seats are to be found.

The ventilating system is with Typhoon fans. The Princess opens on all four sides, and with the fans and numerous windows plenty of fresh air is brought into the theatre at all times. On the hottest night the Princess is cool, partly because of its natural ventilating properties. The heating is by city heat, and is ample for comfort in any weather.

Schanbacher, a famous decorator, is responsible for the beautiful decorative effects. Also for the stage setting, which has been given praise by local film followers.

The projection room is the largest and most elaborate in the city. The operators have all necessary aids and comforts and say it is a pleasure to work in such a booth. Watts insists on perfect projection, and spent much time in having this feature perfected. Patrons say the Princess pictures are the clearest and brightest in town, which is another way of admitting the projection is as near perfect as it can be.

The lobby of the Princess is very beautiful. Handsome oil paintings of famous stars are hung and with the lighting and decorative effects offers a decidedly pleasing sight. The lobby is large enough to accommodate many patrons in case the

The Princess will have the largest theatre orchestra in the city. Musicians of note are being contracted with, and Mr. Watts expects to have the theatre known far and wide for its music. A new pipe organ of giant size will also be installed.

The Princess is the safest theatre in Springfield. It has more exits than any other playhouse, opening on four sides, and all of the 1,400 seats could be emptied in a few minutes should it be necessary. City officials who have inspected it have been highly pleased with their finding, and have complimented the management on the beautiful structure. The cost of remodeling the Princess was $80,000. Mr. Watts also owns the Gaiety, long the best known and most popular film house in town, and the Vaudette, a theatre on the site of Loper's Lyric.

New U- T. E. Catalog is Work of Art

One hundred and eighty pages covered with a well prepared and carefully arranged list of motion picture accessories and the whole thing finely printed on substantial paper with frequent title pages in several colors, comprises the new catalogue of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation. A casual study of the book gives one the impression that this supply firm has carried out the idea of an instructive booklet to a point never reached before by dealers and manufacturers in theatre equipment.

In personnel the U. T. E. Corporation contains a wealth of engineering and executive talent. Mr. H. T. Edwards, president of the corporation, conceived the formation of such an organization in 1917 and immediately surrounded himself with assistants of ability. Mr. J. H. Hallberg is vice president and chief engineer, is a designer of wide scope and many of the devices handled by the U. T. E. are products of his brain. Mr. B. A. Proctor and Mr. Frank T. Forster, mechanical and electrical engineers respectively, are both men of long experience in their fields.

In laying out the booklet those in charge have made it a point to progress orderly from the exterior of the theatre through the lobby to the stage and its properties. Each section is headed by a beautiful frontispiece in three colors. Then follows a complete description of each article coming under that heading.

nI the section devoted to "The Stage" there are given sketches of stage scenery and of the uses of stage hardware.

"Projection Department" gives over a considerable number of pages to actual and ideal theatre layouts, explaining sight lines, projection room arrangement and ventilating systems.

One section even is devoted to the "Motion Picture Studio," displaying a large collection of studio equipment.

It is understood that this catalogue is not for general distribution but is to be supplied only when the inquiry indicates actual interest on the part of the inquirer.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Tests of Screen Illumination from Motion-Picture Projectors

A Paper Presented to the S. M. P. E. by W. F. Little

FIELD illumination for motion-picture projection may be studied by several different methods. Here the experience of the Electrical Testing Laboratories may be of some service and it is the purpose of this paper to present some notes on such tests.

In order to make comparisons between the different methods of study a constant light source or the incandescent lamp was used.

INTENSITY

As the light intensity in the field is more or less a function of the field area, the problem in this connection is to determine the flux in lumens through the objective lens.

UNIFORMITY OF FIELD

The field brightness may vary considerably without greatly affecting the appearance of the picture for the reason that the variations in intensity are gradual.

TEST METHODS

As all the light passing through the objective lens reaches the screen, the quantity of light may be investigated either on the screen or at the objective. Photometric measurements may be used to determine the field intensities by making measurements at the screen. The usual practice is to divide the entire field into equal areas and make measurements in the center of each. The nearer the observation area conforms to the area to be investigated the more accurate is the integration secured. Therefore, in order to cover the entire field these areas should be either large, or numerous. If the observed portions comprehend too large an area, the light intensity variation may be lost sight of. If the measurements are made at the objective, the results will bear no relation whatever to the uniformity of the field. Therefore, the testing may resolve itself into two distinct methods; first, that of the measurements of light upon the screen, and second, that of the measurements of light at the objective. The first may be again subdivided (a) including relatively few measurements, each measurement integrating over a comparatively large area, and (b) a large number of measurements, the average of which produces a close approximation of total flux and a fair index of uniformity; this latter method gives the most complete data.

The optical bar with which the experiments were made consisted of objective, aperture plate, condenser lamp and spherical mirror, all located as in a motion picture projector. An illustration of this equipment appears in the Transactions of this Society, No. 6, Fig. 16, page 68.

The photometer employed in tests of field illumination is so designed that the inequalities in field brightness throughout the observed area are obliterated, the surface appears uniform, and the brightness equal to the average brightness throughout the surface.

The other test apparatus used in the investigation was as follows:

Throw	60 feet
Objective lens	E.F. 5.5. D. 2.5, F. 22
Aperture	11-16 x 29-32 inches
Condenser lens	2½ x 6½
Lamp	Mazda — 900 watt, 30 amperes
Spherical mirror	2¾ inches O.R.C.
Field area	10 feet x 7 feet, 9 inches

With an incadescent light source, slight variations in symmetry of filament or filament alignment may produce a variation in light intensity upon the screen. Therefore, it is advisable to explore the entire field. An accurate alignment of the apparatus is highly essential, therefore the entire test procedure may be simplified if the test-plate and photometric equipment are fixed and the projector is adjustable.

When using a fixed test-plate and photometric equipment, the projector may be accurately aimed by the aid of a telescope and cross-hair. The telescope should be mounted over the pivot about which the projector turns and focussed upon a chart plotted on cross-section paper. A diagram of the field may be readily plotted to scale upon this cross-section paper and mounted in any convenient direction at such a distance from the telescope that the angle subtended by the chart is exactly equal to that subtended by the field. The centering of the cross-hairs upon the center of each test area as shown on the chart will bring the corresponding field areas to the proper position on the test-plate.

If the light source be the arc, the distribution of light intensity over the screen should be fairly symmetrical for the reason that the major portion of the light emanates from the small round crater. However, because of the light fluctuations when studying projection with an arc lamp, it is advisable to use two photometric equipments, one for observing the center of the field, the other for exploring purposes making the measurements simultaneously. In this case it is essential to keep the projector and one photometer fixed. The readings taken with the exploring photometer may then be corrected to the fluctuations of the arc as secured by the fixed photometer.

For the purpose of study, photometric measurements were made on the screen surface dividing the field first into 16 and then into 256 equal rectangles.

16-Point Method

When dividing the field into 16 equal rectangles, fairly adequate integration should be secured if the observed test surface represents at least 40 per cent of the area of each rectangle.

The ellipse in the upper left rectangle on plate 1 shows the relative size of the observed area as compared with the rectangle.

256-Point Method

In dividing the field into 256 rectangles rather than 16, the observed area may be relatively smaller with respect to the rectangle and still render good results. As the light intensity falls off toward the edge of the field, the 256-point method should show somewhat lower light flux than the 16-point method as the observed areas do not quite reach the screen edges. With a field of approximately 8 by 10 feet, the outer rows in the 256-point method are 2 inches or less from the edge of the field.

Measurements at the Objective

As previously stated, all the light passing through the objective falls within the light field. Therefore a single photometric measurement of light flux at the objective may represent the flux upon the screen.

The measurements of light at the objective is not as simple as might at first be expected for the reason that the flux density is very high; through an aperture of approximately 1.5 square inches, a flux in the neighborhood of 800 to 1,500 lumens may pass. Assuming 800 lumens, the flux density would be 530 lumens per square inch or 76,500 lumens per square foot, which is equivalent to the illumination produced by a lamp of 76,500 candlepower at a distance of 1 foot.

In making these measurements, a photometer and a 3-inch velvet lined tube 24 inches long was used. At either end of the tube white diffusing plates were placed and a light filter which served to correct the color of the light to that of the comparison lamp in the photometer.

The two diffusing plates which were separated by 24 inches were employed for the purpose of reducing the light intensity to a value which could be conveniently measured.

The photometer was calibrated in connection with this tube in terms of the 16-point method, and this standardization was maintained by retaining several incandescent lamps as standards. These lamps are burned somewhat low in order to increase their life. It was found by experience that this method of maintaining the standardization was very reliable.

The Question and Answer Series

22. How and what with should a projection lamp be lubricated?

A projection machine should be cleaned once a week and powdered graphite placed on all moving parts and also on the carbon clamps. Oil should never be used as it only burns due to the intense heat and smudges up the lamp.

23. What are the most important parts to be watched about a lamp? Why?

The carbon clamps should be kept clean so that a good contact is made with the carbons. Care should be taken that the clamps do not become grounded on the lamp house. The screw thread adjustments should be kept clean and free from carbon dust.

24. Why are 6¼ condensers called 6½?

Because that is the focal length (approx.) of the lenses. In other words, if the condensers are so placed that parallel light rays enter either surface they will be converged and come to a point approximately 6½ inches from the center of the condenser lens. We say approximately because of the fact that condensers are never corrected for the various aberrations. Because of this the distance may vary from 6¼ to 6¾ inches.

25. Give the main ingredients of motion picture film.

Cotton and camphor.

26. What must be the qualities of the container for films not in actual use?

According to the requirements established by the board of fire underwriters.

27. What are the most important parts to be looked after in projection machine head? Why?

The most important parts in a machine head are the movement, the tension shoes and the upper and lower sprockets, because they are the parts which have to do with the movement of the film and therefore necessary to the projection of a good picture.

28. Do light rays penetrate a lens in a straight line? If so, why? If not, why?

Light rays pass through the lens itself in a straight line but are refracted by the surfaces of the lens and made to converge or diverge according to the shape of the surface.

29. What are the defects of a lens and cause for each? Give remedy for these faults in an objective lens.

There are numerous defects which may appear in a lens, each of which requires a special study. The principal ones are coma, chromatic and spherical aberration.

30. Explain theory of motion pictures.

Moving pictures are an optical illusion based on the persistence of vision.

31. When are magazine doors allowed to be open?

Magazine doors are allowed to be open when machine is dead, both mechanically and electrically.

32. Explain advantage of large outside shutter over small inside shutter.

A small inside shutter is bothersome and somewhat more difficult to adjust. A large outside shutter under certain conditions of machine design will cut the beam of light at greater velocity than an inside shutter.

33. What is flicker? Its possible causes.

Flicker is caused by an unevenness in the succession of light and dark spaces as reflected back from the screen to the eye. Low frequency is also a cause of flicker.

It may be caused by wrong blade design, slow speed, or too high an intensity of light.

34. Give full explanation of the arrangement of the fire doors over the portholes of the booth.

See page 3148, April 3rd issue Motion Picture News.

35. In case of a fire, what is the first thing to do?

Notify the manager, light up the house, and get the people out without panic.

36. In case of a fire in part of a house other than the booth, what must be done?

Keep the picture going if possible to quiet the audience, notify the manager, and have him request the people to file out slowly.

National Anti-Misframe League Pledge

AS a projectionist who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the projection-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way cooperate with my brother projectionists and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Represents Simplex in Western U. S.

Eight months after being organized in Billings, Montana, at which time it consisted of one man and one room, the Western Theatre Equipment Company had blossomed into a firm with two large establishments, one in Billings with eight people and a larger main office in Seattle, the latter office having been purchased from the Seattle Stage Lighting Company, who were the original Simplex franchise holders in that territory, and for which franchise Shearer paid $10,000 in cash.

The Seattle establishment is located on the street floor of the building at 2028 Third avenue, situated in the heart of the Seattle "Film Row." The space occupied on the main floor here is approximately 30 by 160.

In the large show window which is fully 20 feet across, are located 4 Simplex Projectors. Two of them are regulation motor driven types while the other two are finished in white enamel with nickeled mechanisms and trimmings. A white enamel reel cabinet also is included in the window display which does not fail to attract all who pass this unusual exhibit.

Just inside the door, one sees a table upon which are mounted the various carbon arc lamp assemblies used in the Simplex Projectors. This method of mounting the lamps provides for a most convenient examination which is impossible when the lamp is confined within the lamphouse. The decorative scheme throughout the establishment consisting of sienna tinted walls, provides an admirable background for the beautiful frames that line the walls throughout. In the front part of the store are displayed a group of highgrade opera chairs, while on the opposite side of the store are situated a line of glass showcases in which are laid out the various projector units and parts. These parts, properly tagged and indexed, are never disturbed but serve merely as guides to determine in which drawer of the elaborate cabinet system the part in question may be found.

An imposing line-up of Simplex Machines form the feature exhibit. Each of these machines is electrically connected both as to lamps and motors and an actual projection demonstration on a regular theatre screen can be accomplished at any time. In the rear of the building is located the private office of Mr. Shearer, while directly opposite same are the general offices of the concern. In the back of these offices is the stock room in which is contained at least $30,000 of stock at all times, which same is continually maintained due to the fact that Seattle is quite far removed from the source of manufacture. Adjoining this stock room is a fully equipped machine shop and service station which is operated under the direction of Mr. "Billy" Hartford, who is said to be the best known and most efficient repair man in the territory.

All goods are received and shipped thru the rear of the store thus doing away with the inconvenience so often encountered thru carrying goods thru the front of the establishment.

Navy Projection Class Visits Powers'

THE projection class of the Navy Motion Picture School, Brooklyn, New York, in charge of Chief Instructor O'Brien, recently visited the factory of the Nicholas Power Company and acquired much information of a practical nature regarding the manufacture of a modern motion picture machine. Lieutenant O'Reilly, in command at the school, which is now operated without civilian assistance, suggested that Instructor O'Brien take his class through the great machine shops of the Nicholas Power Company. The class saw from start to finish just how a standard professional projector of the highest class is made and assembled. The information will be of great value to them as they have gained a very practical knowledge regarding Power's Projectors which are largely used in the Navy and are on great battleships such as the Pennsylvania, flagship of the Atlantic Fleet. In the school Lieutenant O'Reilly in a broad-minded way has given orders that Power's and other standard machines shall have equal representation.

The sailors had the various operations and processes explained to them by Herbert Griffin, Technical Engineer of the Nicholas Power Company, and P. C. Parrish, Southern Traveling Representative of this Company. The explanations were followed with great interest by the entire class and they and their instructors were kept busy for some hours with the questions and answers.

The class was shown great automatic machines taking tungsten chromium steel bars, scientifically made and selected, and turning them into various parts of the Power's mechanism. They saw these rough cut parts going from machine to machine.

Film News Service Has Been Inaugurated in Wisconsin Towns

M. E. Diemer of University of Wisconsin Is Developing Idea

By W. E. WALKER

LET a piece of news "break" at Madison, Wisconsin. The local reporters are in the front ranks of recorders. Directly behind them are perched the motion picture cameras duplicating the scenes on the impressionable surface of the film. That evening the newspapers carry their accounts of the event. The next afternoon the family goes over to the neighborhood theatre to witness the scenes reenacted on the screen for their amusement.

M. E. Diemer of the University of Wisconsin Photographic Laboratory has inaugurated a film news service in a city of 40,000—a move which bids fair to expand and embrace innumerable small cities throughout the country as the photographer of moderate means comes to realize that with a little more training and a slight additional investment he can extend the field of his activities and increase the profits of his business.

The Madison photographer has entered into a contract with the manager of the local motion picture theatre to click off the results of every important event in the community on his cinema film and have the reels ready for public display purposes on the day following the happening of each big event.

Following on the day of the "wuxtree" and the popular weekly news pictorial, the film news service rendered while the subject still possesses a burning interest in the community comes as a natural sequel in the development of the motion picture.

The service the people of Madison now receive on their local news embodies about everything that could be included without actually reenacting the original scenes.

The field for camera activities is of course unlimited. Whether it is a pageant, a play, a fire, race, football game, homecoming celebration, convention, or merely a Main Street scene, the motion picture camera can be depended upon to record things as they actually exist.

There is no semblance of yellow journalism in the film supplement as a news feature. The cub may get his facts twisted in his haste but it is impossible for the camera to be deceived.

Take the case of a recent football game at Madison, one of the big contests of the west. The papers carried detailed play-by-play accounts of the game but disputed over the identity of the player who made the winning touchdown. There was no disputing the point when the camera gave its version of the play on the afternoon following the contest.

Not only did thousands of fans who witnessed the team in action seek admission to watch the plays re-enacted, but other thousands who were unable to obtain seats for the contest itself tried to get seats at the theatre to enjoy the next best to the real thing, motion pictures of the important scenes.

Madison, being a university town and the capital of the state, of course, offers a more active field for the camera operator than does the average town of 40,000. But there is no small city without its occasional big event. The cost of a camera outfit, fortunately for the development of the film news supplement, is small enough to create only a slight overhead charge on the operating expenses of the photographer when the machine is not in operation.

Mr. Diemer's camera, however, does not confine itself to portrayal of local news events.

As acting on the legitimate stage has been attempted with a considerable degree of success by amateur organizations, so is the motion picture plot being attempted in Madison with a home made scenario and a local caste. That the picture being thus produced will be a local hit is a certainty.

The film as a recorder of news in the small city also serves another useful purpose. It provides the city with a permanent, realistic record of the high lights in its civic activities.

A PIONEER MOTION PICTURE CAMERAMAN

WHENEVER a group of "picture folks" discuss the Motion Picture Industry, you can almost bet your boots you will hear some one say that "the business is still in its infancy." We see developments every day. Pictures are considered the best means to educate. The most costly settings and high salaried stars and directors, etc., are considered least expensive in the long run, as enormous profits are derived on such productions.

The pioneer days of the Motion Picture are almost forgotten, those days when pictures were either made on some roof or in a back yard, the sets being of the cheap variety of stage sets. In the open, the sun was their means of lighting. For this reason the stages were mostly built on revolving platforms so that they could be shifted to follow the sun. Today we have the large enclosed studio, with its artificial lighting and "props" of the best materials obtainable.

Irving Browning, well known cinematographer and author of this article

Let us go back to the good old days of the Motion Picture, the days when the Motion Picture first became a means of entertainment. I have heard the story told by a real pioneer, Eugene Lauste, a French inventor and experimenter of the old days when pictures were really in their infancy. We may take the responsibility of saying that it was in its infancy to him, for he helped develop the profession, having spent the best days of his life in doing so.

He started in his childhood playing with motion pictures as a toy. During his boyhood days he began developing a new idea, until he made a machine that would take and project pictures. Thos. Edison on hearing about him brought him to this country to complete some experiments that he was working on. This gave birth to the Edison Kinetoscope. He then travelled around the world taking pictures and giving shows to Kings and other notables, as they were the first to be shown an entertainment of any sort that was extraordinary. The film used in his day was two inches by two and eleven-sixteenths inches as against three-quarters by one inch of today.

He also experimented on a camera for photographing sound, which after many years of hard work he has completed. He has also the distinction of saying that he is the originator of the loop in both camera and projector, and also the originator of the use of the Maltese Cross in Motion Picture machines.

In his day there were no such things as producers. The cameraman had to do all the work. He directed his own pictures. He did not even have a tripod. He set his camera on a table. In back of the camera was a motor attached. The motor was either run by electricity or gasolene. After the cameraman had directed his actors, he would start the motor and call for action. There wasn't much in the line of continuity in those days as any action was a novelty.

One of Mr. Lauste's sons is now a cameraman and working in England, having been trained by his father. He has also worked in France for Pathe, Gaumont, Eclaire, etc. During the war he served with the French army at the front taking Motion Pictures of the actions.

Mr. Lauste looks at the Motion Picture of today as a great achievement and is glad to be living in this age of Wonder Pictures.

New York Cameramen Form New Association

BELIEVING that in union there is strength, the leading camera men have formed an association incorporated under the laws of New York to be known as the Motion Picture Photographers' Association. Their purpose, a highly commendable one, is to perfect themselves in their art, which is now recognized as being one of the most essential features in the success of motion pictures.

George Peters, for years with Roscoe Arbuckle and Taylor Holmes Production, was elected president of the association; Edward Wynard, of the Fox studios, first vice-president; Fred Chaston, of the Griffith studios, second vice-president; Ned Van Buren, of the Famous Players-Lasky studios, third vice-president; Larry Williams, Special Features, treasurer; Harry Keepers, Famous Players-Lasky studios, Long Island City, corresponding secretary; J. C. Bitzer, brother of William Bitzer, D. W. Griffith's cameraman, recording secretary, and Walter Arthur, representative.

The board of governors consists of Horace Plimpton, William McCoy, Charles Down, Arthur Boss, L. E. Taylor and Paul Allen.

The motto of the organization is "Honor, Ability and Integrity."

As the idea is to progress in the art of cinematography, the members of the association will report upon each new feature that appears, when discussions and criticisms will be in order. There will be an up-to-date projection room stalled in the quarters of the organization and each candidate will have a chance to show his latest work and be passed upon before becoming a member of the association.

Membership in the organization will be strictly by invitation and by the unanimous approval of the membership, each and every man being judged solely upon his record and ability as a motion picture photographer.

Aside from the above, it is to be a beneficial and protective association, and is represented by Nathaniel Cohen, New York counsellor at law.

Over a thousand dollars was subscribed at the first meeting, when the association was launched. Those who have already joined the association are Ollie Marsh, George Lane, Charles Gilson, Edward, Earl, Joseph Ruttenberg, John Stumar, Andre Bariatier, Arthur Miller, Arthur Martinelli, Jack Brown, Al Lignori, H. Sintzeneck, Alfred Gandolfi, William Crolley, Jules Cronjager and Roy Overbaugh.

The Motion Picture Photographers' Association, Inc., will be situated in the heart of the motion picture district in New York City.

First Steps in Musical Understanding

if he will only let them know).

One side to the musical question which so many have overlooked is this:

Good music raises the level of the house. It draws an ever-better clientele. A clientele that sticks. A clientele that is willing to pay better prices.

There is a continual interest in providing good music. It is a serial without any ending! The public knows it always can get a lot of good music at your house no matter what else happens.

The musical interest is something that sticks. Your favorite film star series may go to another house when the contract is over, but the music reputation is always yours, as long as you keep it up.

Music makes reputation for you—your house, not any other company.

With all these general musical ideas in mind, the film man is ready. If he will keep to a high standard, advertise to reach the music-lovers and create a real musical show as a foundation for the picture entertainment, he cannot go wrong.

Of course all through this review of twenty-five weeks' articles on music, the understanding man has just skipped. But for the newcomer—if these thoughts are credited—if these first steps are taken, the way is clear.

The future is full of glorious opportunities for the film music-maker.

Now we can resume our general talks. Next week's discussion is called "The Complete Picture Production."

Hotel Astor to Be Official Headquarters

Arrangements have just been completed whereby the first conference of the Motion Picture and Musical fraternity will be held in the Hotel Astor, Broadway and 46th-47th streets, New York, January 24, 25, 26. The management of the hotel have expressed their best wishes to the two fields of music and pictures and have promised to show every courtesy for which that house is famous. A large reception room will be at the disposal of the representatives for the three-day sessions.

The management of the hotel has urged that those who are coming to the conference ought to make their reservations as far in advance as possible. Representatives to the conference will be given first opportunities of course, but it is important that no delay be made in making the reservations for rooms—now!

In order to be most comfortable, send your hotel reservations to the Hotel Astor at once.

The Music Forum

(Under this heading the new ideas, queries, suggestions are gathered. This is where the motion picture fraternity gets together on music.)

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

It is with great satisfaction that I note the wonderful strides you are making in connection with the Motion Picture Musical Conference. The new dates in January are perfectly agreeable to me; also your plan to have the guests visit my theatre on the afternoon of the second day.

I am giving the coming event the serious thought which it deserves, and do not doubt that it will prove to be a milestone long to be remembered in the industry.—Hugo Riesenfeld, Managing Director, Rialto Theatre.

War Tax Pact

Dear Sir:

We have your communication of the 12th inst. advising us that the Motion Picture Musical Conference will be held on January 24th, 25th and 26th, and assure you that the date is satisfactory to us.

In accordance with your suggestion, we shall prepare to offer to the conference a contract guaranteeing the motion picture industry against the possibility of an exorbitant tax, provided they agree to pay the present license fee.

We presume you have heard of the proposed plan of synchronizing music, which a gentleman named Arthur J. Abrams, of Chicago, representing the American Photoplayer Co., has been endeavoring to consummate. His scheme is to synchronize music for every picture manufactured and to sell the same to the picture theatres throughout the country. Don't you think this is a matter which should be given considerable thought at your conference?—American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, by J. Rosenthal, General Manager.

Music Editor:

In answer to the question with regard to the Fox Film cues, I wish to say the following:

The Fox Film Corp. will not permit any one to see their pictures for the purpose of making a music cue unless it is their own man. I have had several discussions with Mr. Geo. Rubenstein, the general musical director of the Fox theatres, and have tried to induce him to mention the compositions as I do, and not only the tempos. However, I failed in the attempt and was unable to convince him that my idea was the better one. From authentic sources, I know that Mr. Rubenstein is not with the Fox Film Corp. any more, but up to the present I have not been able to find out who is his successor. When I do I will get in touch with him and hope for success in inducing him to cue Fox pictures in the way I suggest.—M. Winkler, Belwin, Inc.

How to Learn Organ

Dear Sir:

In reference to a query you have had in regard to a pianist learning the art of operating an organ for motion picture theatre purposes.

The first principle, of course, for any pianist to operate a pedal instrument such as we manufacture would be to get some practice on foot pedal work, as all our unit orchestras are of the foot pedal type.

The idea of practicing on a pedal two manual reed organ is very good. This will assist the pianist to a certain extent in becoming proficient in the art of using the pedals.

However, you appreciate that on the organs, especially of our type of construction, the tablet arrangement is somewhat different and they get a different combination when using the different effects.

Now we have at our Chicago office a special arrangement for beginners on organ work. Prof. C. B. Ball, at the head of our studies there, takes a "greener," as we would term it, and puts him through a thorough study on the organ. We have a practice piano there with a pedal arrangement, and then we have a demonstration organ that we use especially for the purpose of breaking in players to play our instruments.

It would probably be worth while for this party who is making inquiry of you in reference to learning the organ, to make a trip to our Chicago office and interview our Mr. C. B. Ball, and it will do him more good than going to the expense of buying a reed organ for practice purposes. We have made quite a lot of motion picture organists of ordinary piano players, and through our school or studio at Chicago we have developed some wonderful talent.—R. Wurlitzer Co.

We read with interest the question asked by a man playing the piano for pictures, and we believe that if he would practice on the small two manual reed organ he would get some excellent experience. We would also suggest that he purchase some of the numerous books on organ playing and practice from which he could gain considerable information. We would recommend particularly the books by Stainer, the English organist.

In many cases where we have placed our instruments in the hands of pianists we have had them come to the factory for a short stay and have given them instructions there which has helped them to master the organ in a very short time. Of course, in this line of work, as in any other, "practice makes perfect."—Marr & Colton Co.

Noting your article in the issue of November 6th of the News, am pleased to state that I will be glad to become associated with you and other musical directors in the good work you are to undertake.—Eugene Conte, Musical Director, Plaza Theatre.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I have read the article on "The Story in the Music" and have considered the subject with considerable care. You open up an interesting range of possibilities. Your idea, I believe, were it to be carried out with a reasonable degree of skill, would lead both to a better understanding and to a keener appreciation of the meaning of music on the part of the general public.

Every musical composition, as you say, is the expression of certain emotions in the heart of the composer, and should convey a definite message to its hearers. Certain broad feelings, such as joy, sorrow, anger and love, are readily recognized by the average auditor, but only a relatively small number of people can appreciate the full significance of the work. Especially is this true under the conditions which prevail in the average cinema theatre during the playing of an overture when half the people are chatting together and thinking of anything on earth except what the orchestra is playing.

Here is where your translation of the moods and emotions pictured by the music—its story, if you will—comes into play. Your theatre goer, once he finds his attention directed to the meaning of the music, to which he is listening, pays closer attention to it than he would have done otherwise. Knowing what the composer intended his strains to signify, he strives to get this meaning out of the selection, and, as the composition is unfolded, he finds himself in possession of a new conception of it. He beholds the "light that never was on sea or land" toward which the composer is endeavoring to direct his attention, and his æsthetic sensibility is awakened.

His attention having been called to the fact that every piece of music carries a message as definite and direct as that conveyed by a poem or a painting, he begins to look for its significance in every selection he hears. The result is that, as he exercises the poetic instinct which exists to a degree, be it greater or lesser, in every man, he becomes more and more susceptible to the influence of music. He also becomes more and more appreciative of the meaning of the compositions to which he listens, until a day arrives when he no longer requires the assistance of language translation to catch the thoughts the composer put into his work.

Of course, if this effect is to be produced, the language versions must be done with the greatest care. Their writer should be of an imaginative temperament. He should, moreover, so far as possible, learn exactly the conditions under which the composition he proposes to explain was written, in order better to understand the meaning as the composer intended it to be.

I should be interested to know how your experiment at the Brooklyn Strand came out. Will you please tell me about it?—Allen B. MacMurphy, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Crandall's Idea for Specially Printed Music

Dear Editor:

Knowing that you are always interested in anything for the betterment of the motion picture business at large, I am writing a few suggestions here in regard to music.

One of the things that is very hard to overcome in most of the picture theatres, especially in theatres carrying large orchestras, is the light from the orchestra pit reflecting upon the screen, to say nothing of the light that reflects in the people's eyes. Many things have been done to overcome this, such as setting music stands at different angles, making large, clumsy, deep music stands, etc., all of which have helped a little, but never remedied the real trouble.

If you will take the time to go into one of the large theatres and have all the lights in the orchestra turned out, observing closely the results, and then have all the lights turned on (being sure at all times to have the music on the stands) you will be surprised to see, even in the best regulated theatres, the reflection from the music stands that this test will reveal.

As you know, we work out things very thoroughly here in Washington, and we have fully come to the conclusion that this fault can be cured, but not so long as the paper of the music is white. It occurs to me that if there were any way that this could be reversed—for instance, black or maybe a blue paper with white notes on it—it would probably cut out the reflection. I am enclosing you herewith for illustration a photographed piece of music. You will note that the notes are white, while the background is a dark gray. There is no reflection from this piece of music. Of course, I realize that this photographed music would not be practicable for commercial purposes on account of the tremendous price of photographing, yet I believe that some of the larger music houses, if this were brought to their attention, could devise an inexpensive method of printing music that would overcome this thing once and for all.

Hoping that you will look into this and anxiously awaiting your reply as to some results, I beg to remain with kindest personal regard.—H. M. Crandall, Crandall Theatres, Washington, D. C.

P. S.—As I am using enclosed piece of music for experimental purposes, will appreciate your returning it after you are through with it.

Following this letter, the question was put up to several important publishers. This is what they said:

Dear Sir:

I note your inquiry whether we ever thought about special sheet music for motion picture theatres that can be seen better, instead of the present way of printing the notes in black on white paper.

It is true that such an idea would be very valuable to moving picture orchestras, but the expense involved would more than offset the advantages. It would be very difficult at this late date to bring out music in this form. The condition could not be improved, unless the music for the moving picture orchestras is gotten out in this manner by all publishers. But, as I stated above, the expense involved is far too great to give the idea serious consideration.

Our house is always desirous of taking progressive steps, but in this case I feel the expense involved makes the idea impracticable.—Gustave Schirmer, G. Schirmer, Inc.

Music Editor:

Answering yours of November 10th regarding the advisability of printing music in white on black, as it would do away with the glare of the light, I feel that is not a feasible scheme. This drawback will have to be overcome in other ways, such as using matted or even colored bulbs, preferably yellow or a very green on the desk lights. But not only would the process be expensive, but I am sure that if there are some who favor it, there would be just as many and perhaps more who would be opposed to it.—E. R. Voigt, Boston Music Co.

Mr. Charles D. Isaacson:

I can only say that we are more than anxious to do anything that will bring music of the very highest class into the motion picture theatre. I consider your plan a most remarkable and helpful one, and at this writing I can assure you that we can be relied upon to join in the Motion Picture Musical Conference which is to take place in New York City next month.

You will see by the programs of our Broadway Strand and the Majestic theatres that music, instrumental and vocal, is playing a very important part in the make-up of our entertainments. The Majestic orchestra of thirty members is the largest theatre orchestra in Detroit and our Broadway Strand organization of twenty is now an attraction in itself.

I feel that the motion picture theatre has done more to bring high class music to the people of moderate means than has any other line of amusement, and a conference such as you have under consideration will be the means of still furthering those ends. If there is anything we can do on this end to help please do not hesitate to call on us.—Francis A. Mangan, Broadway Strand Theatre.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

With regard to overcoming the objections from the orchestra player's standpoint in moving picture theatres to the present manner of printing music.

While your idea might be developed and by using green paper and white notes the reflection eliminated, we doubt whether the proposition can be made commercially successful.

Please let us know what the views of other publishers are in the matter. We presume, of course, that you have written to several publishers along the same line.—Carl Fischer.

It is impossible.—Winkler, of Belwin's.

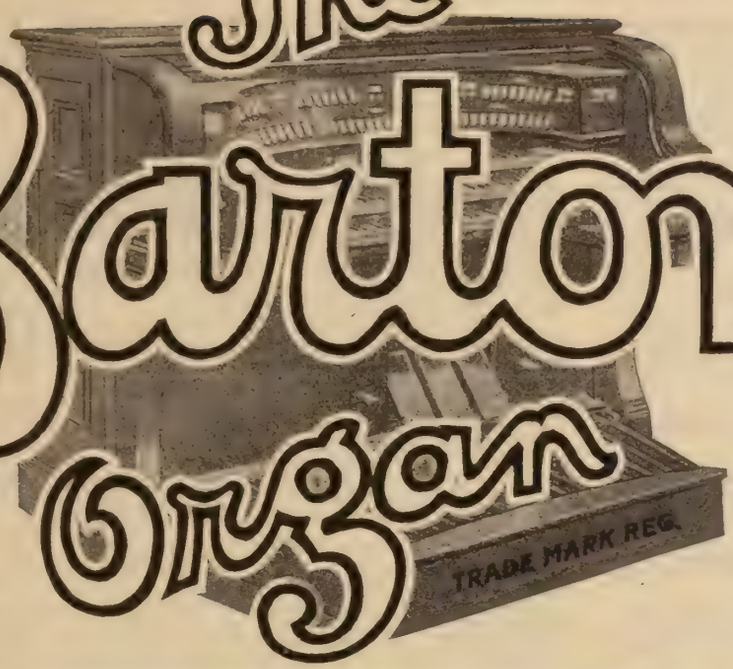
The Barton Organ



Why a Cheap Organ Is Expensive

A pipe organ is a combination of wires, valves, magnets, wind ways and pipes—with hundreds of borings, springs and adjustments that have to work with lightning precision. Your theatre is subject to dampness, heat, cold and dust. Your organist operates this organ mechanism hours a day for years in a battle with the heat, cold and dampness. A cheap organ means cheap construction, and long after you have forgotten the price you are losing sleep over ciphers, dead notes, burned out motors, bad tune and no service. GRIEF—Man, the worry is worth more than the price of the organ.

THE BARTON ORGAN IS BUILT TO KEEP YOU OUR FRIEND FOR THE REST OF YOUR LIFE. THIS MEANS SOMETHING TO YOU.

Cotton Men Build Theatre in South

THE People's Theatre Company, Inc., composed of cotton men in, and in the vicinity of, Greenville, Mississippi, have just opened a $140,000 motion picture palace in that city.

The theatre and building cover approximately 150 by 75 feet, equipped throughout with the latest and most approved theatre equipment that is manufactured at the present time.

The lobby is furnished in buff color with white panels and several attractive lobby display frames are neatly arranged at the entrance with the flooring to match.

On the left, at the entrance, is the box office in which the two unit automatic ticket selling and register machines dispense the admission tickets to the patrons.

There are two balconies and the main floor with a seating capacity of 1582, all upholstered genuine leather chairs.

The stage is neatly arranged with an attractive picture setting and a Minusa Gold Fibre Screen, size 13 feet six inches by eighteen feet is used.

The projection room is in the first balcony and is equipped with two of the latest type "S" Simplex projectors with automatic change-over attachment and several other added features.

Under the operating room floor, in a special room provided for that purpose, is a Hertner transverter of a double 75 ampere capacity. Sixty amperes are drawn at the arc and the switch board and field control is mounted between the two machines and above the operator's lookout port.

The engineering and installation of this equipment was made by the Lucas Theatre Supply Company of Atlanta.

Mr. A. W. Plues, a very capable man in the motion picture business and late of the Vitagraph office in New Orleans, is the managing director.

There will be a special review room installed at a later date where Mr. Plues will review the advance film projections, together with the orchestra leader, which are booked for screening, to insure his patrons of the latest methods in synchronizing and screening motion photoplays.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"April Fool"

(Mermaid Comedy—Educational)

"EIGHT bells and all is well!" So shouts Lloyd (Bud) Hamilton in "April Fool," his latest Mermaid comedy. It is a piece of the roaring deep and as a burlesque of a sailor's life is enough to make an old salt become a landlubber for life. Or rather it would keep the landlubber from wanting to become an old salt. A good illusion is worked with a boat, and the way it tosses Bud and the crew about is enough to make a picture goer seasick. One has too busy a time in being merry to give thought to faint feelings. Bud is more or less shanghaied on the boat—sanghaied via the derrick which dumps freight into the hole.

The first mate (it may be the second, or the bo'sun, or the skipper, or the fat cabin boy) is Bud's chief worry. He is the man of hard work and Bud is given the heavy chores. His attempt to write a letter home to mother is ludicrous, and finally the leaks in the floor cause the water to rise to the level of his scratching pen. A fishing episode is very amusing. Bud slaps a fly with a switch and holds it out the porthole as bait and the fish jump right out the water after it. And Bud brings it in. A bigger fly means a bigger fish.

The climax is when the fish is so big that Bud has to take the trusty shotgun off the wall and shoot it. But he has used a sausage instead of a cartridge and the fish is lost. Finally Bud goads the mate or skipper into a state of warlike activity. He barricades himself into the magazine, and the conclusion shows him floating on a piece of wreckage with the girl. The titles are in a burlesque style of nautical terms and are as funny as the action. Length, two reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Big Idea"

(Pilgrim Pictures Corporation—Educational)

THIS two-reel feature is from the pen of Rufus Steel, staff writer of the "Saturday Evening Post." Although the story may have made interesting reading, there is nothing in the screen adaptation to raise it above any ordinary feature.

The plot deals in propaganda and attempts to point a way of instructing those who fall by the wayside.

The hero is a confirmed radical and believes that whatever the workingman produces he should own. The opening scenes show him reading propaganda news and talking with several of his confederates. In his dreams he believes that he is swaying audiences of workmen to his way of thinking and during his working hours he is seen trying to persuade them in shop and factory.

This fellow seems to be reaching the point of insanity in his desire to carry out his object when "Old Dad," a well known character about town, appears and demonstrates to him in a decisive manner the reason why he should pursue his theories no longer.

When the young radical goes to the tailor and endeavors to get a suit of clothes which he has left to be mended he is surprised to find that the tailor is wearing said suit and refuses to give it up because he says he produced a patch upon the trousers. At another time, when the would-be reformer purchases a glass of tonic at a stand the owner refuses to give him the drink, even though he pays for it, because he tells him that he, the owner, produced the tonic and therefore should drink it.

All the while "Old Dad" is following him about and is delighted with the way his plans are turning out. In the end he brings the young man to reason.

There is nothing interesting in the story, which is ordinarily produced, with an unknown cast.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Cash Customers"

(Featuring Harry Pollard—Pathe)

HARRY POLLARD tries hard to inject a little fun into this one-reeler, but, with the exception of a few instances failed—first, because he had a poor script to work with, and second, because he neglected to get as much as he usually does out of the situations.

Time and again it seemed as though the scenes could have been played to better advantage and more comedy gotten out of them.

In some of the scenes the star worked hard up to a certain point and then lost his advantage by not injecting the right sort of "business."

The drygoods store is again resurrected as the scene of action with Pollard, his 300-pound assistant, the little negro boy and the soubrette doing most of the work.—FRANK LEONARD.

Movie Chat Number Thirty-five

(Urban)

A CHAT all about the people in New Zealand, covering their peculiar tastes and customs, including dances which are yet something to be adopted in civilized countries, their rather distasteful forms of amusement and laborious occupations. The second part of the Chat is devoted to scientific information about the locomotion of the snake. There are all kinds used for example, and while it is difficult to describe the films as "chatty" yet it is fascinatingly pointed. One forms a deeper and graver respect for "Watch your step" if a poisonous snake is about, for the locomotion proves that every little movement means considerable. Especially are the springs of the cobra, and the feeding of a non-descripit black snake of interest. More diverting than amusing. —LILLIAN GALE.

"Thrills Experienced in Sports of Every Day Life"

(Kineto Review)

WHEN this subject is screened, its popularity in spots will depend upon the weather conditions. By this is meant, if in "The Good Old Summer Time," then the winter sports, and thrills experienced thereby will be most enjoyable and there are winter sports, screened in countries where snow and ice lay a firm foundation for tobogganing, ski jumping and snow ball battles. But if "Jack Frost" is uncomfortably about, then the enjoyment will be at its height when we see merry parties making thrilling descents down the "Shoot the Chutes" and riding the "Double Eight," the "Ferris Wheel" or most any popular summer life risking amusement. And for a neutral tone, there has been added interesting footage depicting the thrill encountered by the flight in an aeroplane, the method of life saving in disastrous fires, in France, with comparative views of how it is done in America. Then, too, dynamiting has its own distinctive thrill and when the earth trembles under its mighty force, everyone near, especially the camera man, must experience his. There is a quantity of "let's go" in this typically Urban subject.—LILLIAN GALE.

"There Is No Santa Claus"

(Chester-Outing Scenic—Educational)

THE Swiss Alps in their winter mantle is the subject of this one-reeler. As far as the camera eye stretches one can see nothing but snow. It covers the mountains and valleys to a great depth for many months of the year, and then, in the opening of the summer months, comes the avalanches.

Yet in this wild country there are people brave enough to withstand the rigors of its climate.

Many famous "Inns" dot the landscape, the snow in many places rising to the upper stories.

The sub-titles call attention to the fact that the Swiss Alps is the home of the monks who used to dash out in the blizzards and rescue wanderers with the aid of their St. Bernard dogs.

Many scenes are taken of these famous monks or canons as they appear in their black robes either on foot or on skis, searching the valleys or mountain sides for lost travelers, and always preceded by their enormous dogs.

L. C. Mears, who until November 15 was advertising man for the Peoples theatre, has signed up with the Universal Film Company as feature salesman.

Larry Keating, of the firm of Keating and Flood, owners of the Baker and Lyric theatres, was admitted to membership in the Motion Picture League of Oregon at a recent meeting. J. A. Johnson, local manager of the Pantages, and Lee Pearl, manager of the Baker, were also voted into membership at that same meeting.

The Regent theatre, Calgary, Alberta, presented another of its noteworthy "Gala Comedy Weeks" during the week of November 22, when four outstanding comedy subjects were presented as the whole program for the six days. Prices for this bill ranged from 10c for children to 30c for matinees and from 25c to 45c for evening shows, and the program was presented six times each day, starting at 12 o'clock noon.

The attractions were: "Get Out and Get Under," starring Harold Lloyd; "The Suitor," with Larry Semon; "Jiggs in Society," with Johnny Ray, and Mack Sennett's "The Quack Doctor." Incidentally, this bill followed a week of "Humoresque."

Manager Leach of the Regent, arranges an all-comedy program at regular intervals and, on such occasions, he uses full-page space in the Calgary Daily Herald for the announcement.

Loew's Uptown theatre, Toronto, the largest of the large moving picture theatres to be opened in the Ontario capital, has been converted into a Baptist church—but for Sunday only. The congregation of the Bloor Street Baptist church, which is located a block away from the big theatre, decided, at a meeting held on November 25, to hold regular evening services in the theatre in the future. The reason for the change is that the church has become too small to accommodate the "patronage." The first service in the Loew house was scheduled to be held on Sunday evening, December 5, with morning services in the church as usual.

The new Loew Uptown theatre has a seating capacity of 3,400 and is rated as the second largest theatre in Canada. It has been in operation for three months.

Loew's theatre, Montreal, celebrated the third anniversary of its opening during the week of November 29 by the presentation of a special bill and by special newspaper advertising. The film feature for the week was "Behold My Wife."

The Dominion theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, found "The Wonder Man," starring Georges Carpentier, such a big attraction that the feature was held over for a second week, the extended engagement closing November 27. This theatre re-opened with an exclusive moving picture policy with "The Wonder Man" as the main picture, after an experiment with stock musical comedy had proved to be a failure. The house was closed for several weeks for renovation after the termination of the "stock season." During the second week of the showing of this feature, all children under ten years of age were admitted free when accompanied by adults.

The Strand theatre, Toronto, extended its presentation of "Madonnas and Men" to a second week, this being the week of November 29, because of the success of this, the first Canadian run of the special attraction. A prologue, consisting of a chariot race with real horses on a treadmill, and several dancing scenes, was presented in conjunction with the picture. The engagement closed on December 4.

CLEVELAND

There's a lot of friendly rivalry going on at the Cleveland Pathe exchange between the short subject department, which is directly under Manager Paul Tessier, and the newly established feature department, which is cleaning things up under the guidance of R. E. Flagler. Right now, the two branches are nose and nose, but the feature department expects to take the lead next week with six Pathe feature productions booked into local first-run houses for the month of December, and four more first-run feature bookings to follow right after the first of the year. The Hoffman-Palace, Cleveland's newest 1400 motion picture house, will play "Half a Chance," "Money Changers," "Her Unwilling Husband" and "A Beggar in Purple," during December, while the Knickerbocker plays H. B. Warner in "Dice of Destiny," simultaneously with the Liberty's engagement of "Felix O'Day," the first week in December. This was all done within the past two weeks, while W. B. Frank, Pathe special feature representative was in town, organizing the new feature department. Mr. Frank says he thinks his organization is about complete, with a record like that to begin with, so he's pulling out of Cleveland, and will spend the Christmas holidays at his home in the West.

Phil Selznick, of Phil Selznick Productions, Cleveland, has just purchased "The Trail's End," the screen adaptation of James Oliver Curwood's novel, "Isobel," for Ohio at a cost of $16,000. Selznick went to New York to see the premier exhibition of this picture at the Astor Hotel, and was so enthused over it both as an artistic production and as a box-office attraction that he immediately closed George Davis and Joe Brandt for the Ohio rights to the picture. Selznick expects to have the Prizma natural color picture that was shown at the Astor preceding "The Trail's End," to go with the feature as an added attraction.

Bert Lubin was one of the visiting film men to the city this week. Lubin was interesting local independent exchanges in "Honeymoon Ranch," a thrilling five reel western picture featuring Allene Ray, the San Antonio, Texas girl, who recently won a national beauty contest.

The Roma theatre, Youngstown, has recently been taken over by Warner and Helfer. Warner, who is the father of the well known Warner Brothers, owned and operated the Opera House in Niles until that house was destroyed by fire several months back. Joe Chincilla formerly ran the Roma.

"The Last of the Mohicans" opened its Cleveland run at two first-run houses simultaneously this past week, and both houses reported that the picture was a tremendous success. Manager Emery Downs of the Knickerbocker theatre, one of the houses which offered Cleveland's premier presentation of the famous James Fenimore Cooper story, said that "The Last of the Mohicans" is undoubtedly one of the finest screen productions ever made, and that he did tremendous business during the week's engagement.

C. C. Deardorff, who has been in charge of all Goldwyn publicity out in Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Detroit for the past year and a half, has deserted the exploitation field, to take over the management of the new Sigma theatre in Lima, Ohio. During Mr. Deardorff's connection with the Goldwyn, he has successfully demonstrated the value of special exploitation, and has personally planned and executed no less than a hundred different advertising stunts.

Herman Robbins, general sales manager for the Fox Film Corporation, and Clayton Sheehan, division manager, were both in town last week. While here they rounded up a sales pow pow, and now all the Fox sales force is agog with a desire to sell Fox productions.

Sam Barck and H. Greenberg, owners of the Market Square theatre, Cleveland, have purchased the Opera House at Lisbon, Ohio. The theatre will be remodeled and redecorated and newly equipped throughout. The Opera House has 800 seats.

"When New York Sleeps" played the Strand theatre, Youngstown, early in November to such big business that Manager Denzinger has booked this Fox special for a return engagement at the Strand beginning December 8.

OKLAHOMA CITY

Oklahoma City is to have another new theatre in the near future. A nine year lease has been taken on the building at 131 West Grand avenue by the Rialto Theatre Company, composed of J. C. Hartman, H. G. Hatfield and A. E. Endres. The new theatre will be modern and up-to-date in every particular and will cost approximately $75,000 when completed. This is the fourth theatre prospect launched in the city recently.

W. B. King and S. Lewis are opening a new theatre in Dallas, Texas, named the Court theatre. The new theatre is located across the street from the Court House.

The people who make headquarters around the court house are figured to make up most of the patronage. There is going to be a little item of service for those who come to attend court; that is, the patron will be called from the box-office and notified when he is called in the court room.

Dominic Buffo has let the contract for a new moving picture theatre to be built at Hartshorne, Okla. The new theatre will occupy 50x100 of space.

A new theatre was opened at Lockhart, Texas, October 31st, to pleased capacity business.

W. A. Playter of the Playter studios of Spokane, Washington, together with associated actors, have arrived at Pawhuska, Okla., and will make an Indian photoplay which has been written by J. Winthrop Kelly. The scenario is based upon historic facts of the Osage Indians. When finished, the picture will be distributed through the First National Exchange.

The Lucille Motion Studio of Oklahoma City has gone to Shawnee, Okla., where a new film will be made, depicting the blanket. Indians, true to nature.

The Queen theatre at Abilene, Texas, has recently installed a giant photoplayer costing $5,000.

Announcement has been made that Griffith Bros., of Dallas, Texas, have purchased the Regal theatre at Gatesville, Texas, from Adolph Fischer. R. M. Avery of Palestine, will manage the Regal.

H. Spencer will reopen the Palace theatre at Cherokee, Okla., in the near future.

Barclay Morgan has purchased three lots at Henryetta, Okla., and will immediately start the construction of a modern theatre with seating capacity of 2,000. The building will be seventy-five feet wide and a hundred and twenty-five feet deep and will be named the Barclay.

One of the finest motion picture theatres in the South will be erected by J. W. Mastin and I. N. McCrary, at Fort Worth, Texas, in the near future. The lot is 50x100 in area and will be entirely occupied by the theatre, which will be constructed of steel, brick and terra cotta and will be absolutely fireproof. The main floor and balcony will have a combined seating capacity of over 1,000.

NORTHERN NEW YORK

There have been a number of rumors about Buffalo that the Shea Amusement Company had abandoned its project to build the new Shea Metropolitan on Main near Chippewa street. These rumore undoubtedly gained headway because of the building of stores at the entrance to the proposed theatre. However, Harold B. Franklin put a spike in these rumors by announcing that work would begin on the new house in the spring and that the reason the company had delayed thus far was because of the high cost of building materials. Mr. Franklin estimates that by delaying until spring the company will have saved close to $200,000 on the construction work alone.

Mr. Franklin says that when the Metropolitan is opened it will be one of the finest theatres for the exclusive presentation of motion pictures in the country. Inasmuch as work will not begin until spring the company has rented the stores in front of the proposed site for a year. Work will commence in the rear of these stores and the lobby, where the stores are located, will be constructed last.

Shea's Hippodrome will soon inaugurate a "Local News Review" in cooperation with the Buffalo "Evening News," according to an announcement by Harold B. Franklin, managing director of the Hipp. The films will be shot, developed and printed by the United Protectoscope Company.

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood theatre, West Utica street at Elmwood avenue, gave a special matinee for the children on Friday, November 26, which was during the Thanksgiving holidays. The Elmwood has a seating capacity of 1,610, but on this afternoon, according to Mr. Fowler, 1,850 persons found their way into the theatre. The films on the bill were "Alladin and His Lamp" and a special production of "Black Beauty," which was obtained from a New York independent company. The children had the time of their lives. Mr. Fowler has been getting out a number of attractive black and white hand drawn ads recently, which has stood out like a house afire on the local amusement pages.

The Buffalo "Express" this week announced an increase in its Sunday theatrical display rates of 70 cents per inch, making the rate $4.20, the highest in Buffalo. The "Express" also announced that hereafter it would charge for all cuts run on its Sunday drama pages. The announcements were the cause for the calling of a special meeting of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association and the decision to give the "Express" one inch only on Sunday. The Sunday drama page of the "Express" on Sunday, November 28, was not a very attractive one, containing as it did a series of one-inch ads for every house except the Lyric and Olympic. Buffalo exhibitors declare that they will not pay the new rate and it is possible that if the "Express" persists in keeping the rate up many of the houses will stop advertising.

Genesee, N. Y., is to have a new motion picture theatre. The building at the corner of Bank and Wadsworth streets, formerly used as a church, is being remodeled by Blouvett & Merritt of Leroy, N. Y. The building is well adapted for picture theatre purposes. It is being entirely redecorated, the heating plant improved, and a new 16-foot entrance is being constructed on the Bank street side. A new organ will be installed. The seating capacity will be increased to 500.

The Rev. William R. Taylor, pastor of Brick Church, Rochester, N. Y., had the thrill last week of seeing his own son, William J. R. Taylor, repulsing an attack from German aviators over the battlefield in France. This thrill came to Dr. Taylor as he sat in the Arcade theatre, where the U. S. official war films were being shown. Dr. Taylor's son was an officer in the Third Balloon Squadron of the Air Service. Manager A. J. Roth at Dr. Taylor's request promised to secure a duplicate of the part of the film showing his son's exploits.

Special matinees are getting to be quite the vogue in Buffalo. During the Thanksgiving holidays the Victoria, Elmwood and Regent all gave matinees on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, all doing big business.

"THE MARK OF ZORRO"
(United Artists)

Fairbanks Puts Over Another Surefire Attraction

ALL the novelty of the first part of "The Modern Musketeer," the action of "When the Clouds Roll By" and the thrills of "The "Mollycoddle" sums up the good of "The Mark of Zorro." The bad, if it can be termed that, lies solely in the fact that the period of the story is a century past and that the picture is a costume affair.

"Doug" plays the role of the son of a Southern California grandee during the Spanish regime, who, masquerading as "Zorro," a bandit, wreaks vengeance on the tyrant officials for their mistreatment of the natives and priests and finally accomplishes a reform in government.

Instead of trying to put over the picture on its story value, right the opposite has been accomplished. The actual plot provides only the opportunity for "Doug" to pull his athletic stunts and portray two distinct characters.

As "Don Diego Vega" he is supposedly a supercilious, effeminate Spanish nobleman. As "Zorro" he is a rip roaring, swashbuckling, eat 'em alive bandit who carves a "Z" with his sword on all who incur his displeasure and makes love to pretty Marguerite De La Motte in irresistible fashion.

The picture alternates with sequences in which the two characters are given about equal opportunity. The "Zorro" scenes are full of action, stunts, thrills and good comedy bits. The "Don Diego" sequences show a clever characterization, one which presents a new Fairbanks and fully contradicts any claim that this star is an acrobat and not an actor. Both parts are imbued with a certain satirical humor that makes the spectator forget everything but the star, even to the obvious ending that is plainly in sight from the first.

As to production this has cost a barrel of money. A lot of big expensive sets have been required and the cast is a large one. Two famous screen "villains," Noah Beery and Robert McKim officiate. The detail of every scene is perfect. The costuming is worthy of a spectacle. And the stunts, well Fairbanks has never put over anything better.—Length, 7 reels. —J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Don Diego Vega / Senor Zorro ..... Douglas Fairbanks
Sgt. Pedro ..... Noah Beery
Don Carlos Pulido ..... Charles Hill Mailes
Donna Catalina (his wife) ..... Claire McDowell
Lolita (their daughter) ..... Marguerite DeLa Motte
Captain Juan Ramon ..... Robert McKim
Governor Alvarado ..... George Periolat
Fray Felipe ..... Walt Whitman
Don Alejandro ..... Sydney DeGrey

Adapted from an "All Story Weekly" novel titled "The Curse of Capistrano," by Johnston McCulley. Directed by Fred Niblo.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The one and only "Doug" Fairbanks will be seen at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement in his latest motion picture production, "The Mark of Zorro," a romantic comedy drama adapted from the famous story, "The Curse of Capistrano," and in which the premiere comedian of the screen plays a mysterious masked bandit back in the days before California was the motion picture centre and when the Missions were in their flower.

The new Fairbanks offering is described as containing all the ingredients that go to make up the ideal picture for this star. There are athletic stunts, that even Doug has never excelled. A fine story is a basis of the production. Plenty of comedy has been retained and a pleasing romance rounds out the feature while in no way interfering with the action and the incident on which any good picture largely depends for success.

A most capable cast has been secured in support of the star, among which is Wallace Barry, the screen's most capable villain. The production is elaborate and the thrills provided are unusual. All in all it is a typical Fairbanks picture from beginning to end, which is proof positive that it will please.

PROGRAM READER

Under the title of "The Mark of Zoro" Doug Fairbanks latest picture production comes to the ———— theatre for a ———— days showing beginning ————.

"The Mark of Zoro" is an adaptation of the popular novel "The Curse of Capistrano," a story of the early days of California during the time when the Spanish Missions were flourishing. The plot is based on actual history, the principal characters being authentic. The story concerns a mysterious bandit who robs the rich and crooked Spanish officials of Lower California and gives to the poor and the padres; who fights many sword duels and who especially combats a notorious political officer and finally wins a bride. The material which the original story contained was ideal for picture purposes and the Fairbanks producing staff has added a great deal of interesting and thrilling incident that did not appear in the original.

Those who enjoy Fairbanks at his best, with thrills, athletic stunts good comedy and a continual round of action, should not miss this picture.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill this as a picture of thrills and action with plenty of comedy, giving just a bare idea of the plot. Go easy on the fact that it is a costume offering, since the story itself amounts to nothing from an entertainment angle.

For stunts we would suggest a masked man in attire similar to that Fairbanks wears in the picture, parading the streets. For a lobby display build a mission entrance with vines and Southern California flowers. For a prologue idea a tavern interior of the period of the picture about 100 years ago in the locale of the story with Spanish songs and Spanish dances by performers attired in dress of the period.

CATCH LINES

"Doug's" greatest picture to date. Full of action, stunts, comedy and thrills. A fitting successor to "The Mollycoddle" and "When the Clouds Roll By."

"DICE OF DESTINY"
(Hampton-Pathe)

H. B. Warner Puts "Punch" Into Strong Dramatic Story

H. B. WARNER has come through with another good picture in "Dice of Destiny." This production follows along the lines of the play which made Warner so popular a few years back, "Alias Jimmie Valentine," and is just as full of incident, suspense and human interest as the well known play.

The story which is from the pen of John Moroso opens with a bang, and develops to a strong climax, a very clear continuity connecting the two important links. There are spots, however, when the story "takes a drop," but these "spots" are so few and far between that they could be entirely eliminated without effecting the value of the picture.

The story's chief asset lies in the fact that many of its sequences are novel and hold strong sustaining interest. For instance, in the opening sequence one of the first scenes shows the star's legs as he approaches a working man who is eating his lunch. This man turns out to be a detective, being "planted" to watch Warner, who is just released from prison, that he may "get a line" on his future plans.

Warner "picks" him, however, and when opportunity presents itself, hands him a doped cigarette which the latter smokes, becomes sleepy and in this condition affords the crook a chance to relieve him of his badge. Proceeding to the home of a friend he finds that the latter has been killed and detectives in the act of arresting his daughter and another crook. The badge is flashed and in a most interesting series of events, Warner succeeds in extricating his friends. A rather novel introduction.

But it is Warner's splendid characterization of the crook which upholds the play and glues the spectator's eyes to the screen when he appears. In the dramatic moments he reaches his climaxes in a very effective manner and in the lighter scenes he is a real Romeo when the situations call for "a little love making."

Good judgment is used in the selection of the cast, every one of which is a type.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Jimmy Doyle ..... H. B. Warner
Nancy Preston ..... Lillian Rich
Dave Monteith ..... Howard Davies
Joe Caffey ..... Harvey Clark
Bill Preston ..... J. P. Lockney
James Tierney ..... Claude Payton
"Gloomy" Cole ..... Frederick Huntley
Agnes ..... Rosemary Theby

Scenario by Fred Myton.
Story by John Morosco.
Directed by Henry King.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Dice of Destiny," the latest Hampton-Pathe production, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

H. B. Warner is the star in a role similar to his unforgettable "Alias Jimmie Valentine." As Jimmy Doyle, the famous jewel thief, he is given plenty of opportunity to display his unusual ability in a role of this style.

The story concerns the mysterious disappearance of a famous crook which has puzzled the detectives and police. He has not been seen for six months, his last appearance being on the day of his release from the penitentiary when he pulled a daring coup on detective Tierney that enabled his gang to escape just as it was about to be arrested.

Old Bill, another crook, has kept his daughter Nancy out of the "game" so far, but when he was gone what would happen to her? He distrusted everyone but Jimmy Doyle who was clean and played the crook game straight. He had been a brother to Nancy and to him Bill entrusted his most precious possession.

But where had Jimmy gone and why—and what were the outcome of his efforts? All these things will be explained in "Dice of Destiny," a crook play "chuck full" of romance, suspense and human interest.

The cast includes Lillian Rich, Howard Davies, Rosemary Theby, Claude Payton, Frederick Huntley, Harvey Clark and J. P. Lockney.

PROGRAM READER

"If you ever frame me, Tierney, because I'm an ex-convict, I'll kill you, if it's the last thing I do," said Jimmy Doyle, the famous jewel thief. "I never frame a crook," was the detective's reply. "I just watch 'em and from now on you are going to get my personal attention."

On this old world of ours we are but dice shaken by the hand of Destiny. Destiny's throw predetermines our lives. It may cast us either in the role of peasant or king, beggar or millionaire, minister or thief.

The dice of Destiny shook Jimmy Doyle into the underworld. Fate played queer tricks with the fortunes and misfortunes of Jimmy and the girl he loved, Nancy Preston, who had been left in his charge by her father because the latter found that out of all those he knew, Jimmy was the only one who could be trusted.

But now Jimmy had disappeared and the detectives and police were puzzled over his whereabouts.

"He'll come back. They always do," prophesied the detective. But Jimmy didn't come back. Where Jimmy Doyle had gone, why, and the outcome of his efforts to go straight for the sake of a girl, will be shown at the ———— theatre with H. B. Warner in the role of Jimmy Doyle. It is a Jesse Hampton production released through Pathe.

SUGGESTIONS

Don't be afraid of this one for it has all the elements which go to make up a strongly interesting feature. In fact the picture is one of the best "crook dramas" seen upon the screen in a long time.

Bill Warner as strongly as you can. Tell your patrons of his past performances and do not forget to mention that the picture is another "Alias Jimmie Valentine." The star first became popular for his wonderful work in this play and this has probably led him to produce a story of this kind on the screen.

Warner is supported by Lillian Rich in the leading feminine role, who gives a finished performance in a rather difficult part. This young woman is well known and should receive her share in your advertising.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last eighteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompased in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to August 14, 1920.

"LOVE"
(J. Parker Read, Jr.-Asso. Producers)

Louise Glaum Scores in Familiar Picture, Sumptuously Mounted

THE stories which have been given to Louise Glaum, of late, have a distinct sex flavor about them. The latest which carries the simple title of "Love" is a variation of Eugene Walter's "The Easiest Way." This same title may be a misnomer to those who define the word as an expression of simplicity or self-sacrifice. The picture is well named if it means passion. The familiarity of the story is pretty well covered up with a rich and colorful production. J. Parker Read, Jr., doesn't do things by halves when he stages a feature. He has given Wesley Ruggles a good sized check book to do with it as he pleases and the result is an offering which is quite on a par with "Sex," in point of interior decorations.

If it fails to carry the same dramatic sweep and vitality the fault may be found in the theme which is not entirely consistent. However, Louis Joseph Vance has composed a scenario of even continuity, the scenes being well arranged and containing an adequate amount of incident. "Love" is the story of the tenement worker who sells herself to the highest bidder in order to overcome the sordidness of her workaday world. It is intimated that she has a fine motive for doing so because it means happiness for her little sister. But the character loses sympathy to some extent by dismissing the real man in her life in a matter-of-fact way. In order to condense the story to feature length some liberty in all likelihood had to be taken with the logic.

Miss Glaum is so sincere in her portrayal, however, that the average spectator won't take its inconsistencies into consideration. Some may question the sudden transition of the tenement girl into a woman of the world, but they must take into allowance the fact that the East Side girl is a faithful imitator of her Fifth Avenue sister. The picture is always interesting, even though the denouement is anticipated. Read is a student of the drama and can build dramatic situations and climaxes with good ingenuity. A slight touch of coincidence enters when the hero comes in contact with the moral leper and is shocked to discover his sweetheart's fall from grace. But the big love in her life and the love for the child causes her to seek the road to redemption and the hero's love is great enough to make him forgive. The picture is quite true to life in many respects. If the motive for her fall had been well established it would ring with a more convincing quality. James Kirkwood, as the forgiving hero, and Joseph Kilgour, as the philanderer, are praiseworthy in their parts. From a production standpoint the feature is flawless. Rich interiors, bizarre effects and effective lighting contribute splendid atmosphere. "Love" should make a good audience picture.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Love" is the title of Louise Glaum's newest picture which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next————. It is acclaimed by impartial critics one of the most dramatically effective and sumptuously mounted offerings of the year and is a worthy companion photoplay to "Sex" and "Love Madness." Miss Glaum has rapidly forged ahead as an emotional actress of the first order and under the guidance of J. Parker Read, Jr., she has established a popularity founded upon her capabilities. "Love" is from a scenario by Louis Joseph Vance, the well known author, and it permits the star to appear in a role which commands the utmost sympathy.

As Natalie she is a daughter of the tenements and tired and oppressed and eager to climb out of her environment she listens to the entreaties of a philanderer. She discovers that life is easy and rosy along the primrose path but a day comes when the misery of her new life is comparable to her days in the tenement. It is then that she decides to redeem herself and the man she dismissed—the only man who had meant anything to her, is willing to forget and forgive. The picture builds in scenes of dramatic conflict and the production is sumptuous. Miss Glaum wears some striking gowns. Prominent in her support are James Kirkwood and Joseph Kilgour. Wesley Ruggles directed.

PROGRAM READER

Louise Glaum, one of the few genuine dramatic actresses of the screen, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "Love," by Louis Joseph Vance. This is a worthy companion picture to "Sex" and "Love Madness." It permits the star to rise to the heights in sheer emotional fervor and she gives a colorful portrayal as the daughter of the tenements who finds life too great a burden in her sordid environment and travels the primrose path. The picture soars with lifelike dimensions and generates a great deal of human appeal and sympathy. "Love" is wonderfully produced, the scenes being lavish and rich in atmosphere. We have come to expect a great deal from a Louise Glaum picture and "Love" is a high class offering in every respect. Miss Glaum's company includes James Kirkwood and Joseph Kilgour.

"DANGEROUS BUSINESS"
(First National)

Rather Frail But Fairly Amusing

THIS may be called by some an ideal comedy-drama for Constance Talmadge since it exploits her to the limit with her unique methods of impersonation. But it strikes us as more fitting for a masculine star since the theme is woven around a representative of the sterner sex. Properly developed it would fit more than one male star's personality and it seems inconsistent as an expression for Constance Talmadge's talent. The title has its meaning in the pastime of falling in and out of love as practised by a resourceful hoyden who believes in having her own way.

By developing it in this manner, John Emerson and Anita Loos have not erred, for in nearly every scene Miss Talmadge holds the stage. The idea itself is unoriginal and merely details the transformation of a boob into man of compelling personality. For three reels the picture is the star's, then she has to take a back seat for the logic in the story. The country is on the verge of war and the girl is engineered by her mother into a marital setting. The would-be benedict has been drafted and he wants the ceremony over with. But the heroine doesn't love him, so she starts telling fibs—fibs which precipitate a deal of adventure for her before the conclusion is reached. She is bedecked in her wedding finery and is marching down the aisle when she declares that she is married to Clarence, the afore-mentioned boob, who has been her father's secretary. This young man has worshipped her from a distance and is timidity personified. But word comes that he is returning and the gay fibber thinks by tipping him off that things will be all right. She goes to keep an appointment with a lounge lily and Clarence arrives just in time to stir up a pretty commotion. He is completely changed. From a meek mouse he has become a roaring lion. And he makes his pseudo-wife live up to her wild declarations. Some of the incident building from his return is rich in humor and considerable spice. There is a quite a tingle under the skin to see him order the girl about. He even orders her to disrobe and climb in bed. His dominance is successful in winning her for a bride in the end and she promises to behave by giving her attention to children. The final shot will appeal to feminine audiences since it shows the young married couple giving the baby a bath. The picture sags in the middle, but its last two reels carry a healthy punch, even though there are scenes which are unduly repetitious. The picture is not up to the Talmadge standard, though it could have been a real winner if developed consistently in theme and characterization. Kenneth Harlan is good as the youth who found his manhood in the war. The titles are in Miss Loos' best style. The Strand, New York, seemed to enjoy it immensely and the audience chuckled approvingly.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Constance Talmadge is the star of the John Emerson-Anita Loos picture, "Dangerous Business," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is an ideal vehicle for the talented comedienne since it permits her the dangerous pastime of falling in and out of love. As Nancy Flavel she flits from one romance to another until the war threatens to make her lonely. Her mother thinks she loves Mr. Braille, who is caught in the draft but at the last minute Nancy breaks up the ceremony by declaring that she is Clarence Brooks' wife, having married him while he was in camp.

Clarence, incidentally, has been her father's secretary and has worshiped the girl from a distance. But as a likely husband Nancy has never found him ideal. He comes back transformed and proceeds to make Nancy live up to her wild declarations. And in the end he conquers her by sheer force of personality—a force which has been lying dominant during his secretarial days. The war has made a man of him and Nancy falls head over heels in love. The various scenes are well constructed and developed so that every ounce of humor and sparkle is extracted. Miss Talmadge gives her customary good performance and her support, including Kenneth Harlan and George Fawcett, is capable.

PROGRAM READER

Her life is just one romantic adventure after another. But when the war broke out her mother was determined to have her safely married to a chap who was caught in the draft. But the girl avoided the matrimonial bonds by declaring in her best fibbing style that she was married to her father's secretary, who had enlisted. She had selected him because she could dominate him and knew that he wouldn't mind. But he came back a changed man and made her live up to her wild schemes. How she is subdued is told in five reels of most delightful comedy. The picture is by John Emerson and Anita Loos and is in their customary pleasant vein. Constance Talmadge is the star of "Dangerous Business," which comes to the ———— next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

The combination of names—Constance Talmadge, John Emerson and Anita Loos—should mean much in the exploitation of this picture. The first mentioned has a sure following and the authors and directors have established a following by fashioning clever screen stories. So go the limit in presenting their names to the public. Tell that it is an ideal vehicle for the star—that it permits her to score her original mannerisms to the queen's taste. You might play up the plot, giving an inkling of what it contains without giving the idea away. Use snappy copy and catch lines.

"BILLIONS"
(Nazimova-Metro)

Very Weak Picture Material in Nazimova's Latest

IF "Billions" is a sample of Nazimova's judgment in picking her own material (we assume she has her rights in the matter) then she should gladly step aside or co-operate with someone who knows the value of a screen plot. There is certainly no evidence of showmanship displayed on her part and the Nazimova of "Revelation," "Out of the Fog," and "Eye for Eye" is destined to lose her popularity unless she consents to stop dabbling in willy-nilly subjects and take up stories which have dramatic contents. She is almost in a class by herself as an exponent of emotional expression and just why she should attempt to play ingenue roles is inexplicable in the face of her worth while characterizations.

This picture will make more than one of her devotees rub his eyes in wonder over the selection. The plot is absolutely spineless and if it was chosen for its comedy elements the development has certainly missed the mark. Nazimova is not a comedienne, nor an ingenue, and her effort to bask in the weak sunlight of sugary sentiment and romance is entirely foreign to her style of acting and temperament. The picture would look better as a three reeler and it has a hard time holding the interest. An exotic Russian princess encourages a struggling poet to keep on hunting for the divine fire of inspiration. Good fortune smiles upon him and makes him a millionaire for a time until the clause in the will of the deceased uncle places him back in poverty.

For three reels scenes of sweetened sentiment are disclosed between the princess and the poet. She will teach him his place by declaring that her wealth is measured in billions. The action is exceedingly mild and the effort to inject drama by blackmail and compromise is fruitless—so labored are the scenes. Other shots are meaningless. For instance, those which present a group of flappers at the business of taking snap-shots of the hero—or a group of loungers "kodaking" the princess. "Billions" is all much ado about nothing, and seems like a waste of money if the director has gone to the trouble of erecting special sets. The acting is as weak as the story. Victor Potel caricatured his study of a Russian figure. Of incident and drama it has none; of sentiment a large generous sample which is spread on too thickly. Oh, for another "Out of the Fog."—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "Billions," the newest Nazimova picture. The incomparable star has in this adaptation of an old French play, a subject which shows another side of her remarkable versatility. The offering establishes her as a delightful comedienne. Nazimova proves here she is just as adaptable for pictures of a humorous character as for those which are developed in a serious vein. She plays the part of a Russian princess who encourages a struggling poet to find expression. Eventually she meets him without knowing it and determines to show that his recently inherited fortune is of no account in matters of romance.

While he talks in terms of millions, she expresses herself in terms of billions. But the poet learns that his fortune is made of bubbles. And so he becomes the struggling poet again. But he is successful in love for the princess accepts him. The picture is rich in romance and sentiment and carries considerable charm and whimsical touches. Nazimova gives a clearly defined study of her role and her support includes Charles Bryant who is also responsible for the adaptation. Others in the cast are Victor Potel, John Steppling, Emmett King and Marian Skinner. Ray Smallwood directed.

PROGRAM READER

Nazimova, the star of "Revelation," "Madame Peacock," and other pictures is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in her newest photoplay, entitled, "Billions." This offering is an adaptation by Charles Bryant of an old French play and permits the star unbounded opportunities to express her remarkable talent. She gives flashes here of being a genuine comedienne. The picture is a romance which scores for its subtle comedy and charming sentiment. Nazimova is ever original in her interpretation and her portrayal of the Russian princess who falls in love with a struggling poet is marked for its unique touches. The star is supported by players who were chosen for their adaptabilities. Ray C. Smallwood, who has directed her features for some time, is again in charge and his production is first rate in every particular.

SUGGESTIONS

You can concentrate upon the fact that Nazimova is original again in this picture. Tell that patrons have seen her in every type of drama but comedy. Bring out that she appears in a delightful performance and gives evidence that she must be reckoned with as a comedienne. The source of the picture amounts to nothing. So exploit the star to the exclusion of everything else. You might bill the offering as a sentimental comedy—one that is rich in romance. Play up the other players. Emphasize what her name stands for on the screen and tell of her past successes. In any newspaper copy treat her name in a dignified fashion. Go after the better class of patrons.

CATCH LINES

When she met a man who was idolized for his money she promptly taught him his place. Wealth cannot buy romance. See Nazimova in "Billions."

"THE THIEF"
(Fox)

Fairly Interesting With Pearl White Scoring a Hit

FOX has presented "The Thief" before, and taking advantage of the highlights when Dorothy Donnelly starred in it, the producers have turned out a fairly interesting drama for Pearl White. When the picture was first offered the theme and characterization were somewhat new, but since that time it has been used over and over in various guises with the result it has lost some its appealing qualities. Indeed Henri Bernstein's play which created a furore upon the Paris, London, and New York stage, served in teaching a much needed object lesson to young married couples. Therein lies its strength today. Fox has given the subject a strictly American setting, although the idea itself could be understood in any tongue. But the American characters substituted for the original French places the spectator into more intimate contact.

The picture has lost its grip and suspense through the years of its first presentation and the majority who see it will doubtless anticipate the action. However, Charles Giblyn, the director, has developed it in a key of mystery so that one unfamiliar with the plot may be more or less interested in the character of the thief. Still certain incidents need a lot of explanation. A great deal of stress is placed upon the figure of the love-sick youth and the actual crime of stealing the money is never shown. But it doesn't take a deal of imagination to suspect the richly gowned wife of a man of moderate circumstances. The hole in the logic is discovered in his swallowing his wife's arguments, "hook, line and sinker." She is dressed like a million dollars, yet he never questions her or wonders at the expensive wardrobe. Which, of course, makes him a jackass.

The argument of the drama comes forward in the wife's plea that she has stolen the money to appear well dressed in the eyes of her husband and thus hold his love. Finally the victimized host notices his depleted bank-roll which he keeps in a desk and employs a detective to hunt down the thief. When suspicion falls on the youth, the real culprit confesses. The result is the argument is hammered home again. The climax is quite effective and is executed in a melodramatic manner. The incident makes the picture quite improbable. The host and his guests and the husband never bat an eyelid over the sudden transformation of the heroine from a dowdy character into a fashion plate. A counterplot with the inevitable compromise as conceived by a moral leper who has the "goods" on the wife, furnishes a mild thrill. The picture is adequately staged and acted. Pearl White seems to be as well equipped with emotional fervor as she is with serial calisthenics.—Length, 5,400 feet.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Mary Vantyne ..... Pearl White
Andrew Vantyne ..... Charles Waldron
Ralph Blake ..... Wallace McCutcheon
Richard Lenwright ..... George Howard
Isabelle Lenwright ..... Dorothy Cummings
Long ..... Sidney Herbert
Valet to Long ..... Anthony Merlo

By Henry Bernstein.
Scenario by Max Marcin and Paul H. Sloane.
Directed by Charles Giblyn.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Pearl White's third feature play for Fox, "The Thief," is an adaptation of Henri Bernstein's play of the same name which scored such a sensation upon the stage a few years ago. It will be the main attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. The subject gives the star a wonderful opportunity to show her followers her real dramatic ability as distinguished frfom her work in serials. Prominent in her supporting company are Charles Waldron, Wallace McCutcheon and George Howard.

The star appears in lavish gowns. In fact the theme revolves around clothes and money. Miss White has the role of Mary, whose fondness for dress and love for her husband lead her into temptation. He is not a man who can afford to keep her in fine clothes and, anxious to appear at her best, she obtains them by stealing money. She well knows that the men will pay distinct homage to her. Her indiscretion precipitates situations of dramatic strength and the climax is rich in its tense quality. Charles Giblyn directed the feature and has ably staged it as well as taking care of the dramatic opportunities. Max Marcin and Paul H. Sloane scenarioized the play.

PROGRAM READER

Pearl White, the Fox star who is one of the most popular figures on the screen, will appear next ———— at the ———— theatre in the production, "The Thief," based upon Henri Bernstein's play of the same name. This play, incidentally, scored a sensation upon the New York stage a few years ago with Margaret Illington as the star. As a picture it should prove a most interesting attraction. In "The Thief" Miss White is the wife of a man who has not sufficient wealth to keep her in fine clothes. The change causes the other women to cater to her and stirs the men to making love. But there is a thief in the circle. How this character is discovered builds a climax of sheer dramatic power. The star is wonderfuly gowned and her acting is excellent.

SUGGESTIONS

Your crowd knows Pearl White. So tell them that she is coming in the third feature for Fox. Bring out that she appears in a richly dramatic subject, an adaptation of Henri Bernstein's celebrated play, "The Thief." State that the play scored a tremendous hit upon the Paris, London and New York stage and that it established Margaret Illington as an emotional star. Bring out that it establishes Pearl White as an emotional star of the first order. Tell that she wears a distinctive wardrobe which will appeal to feminine patronage. Play up the stills of her in these costumes. You might detail the plot here and bring out that it teaches a valuable lesson.

JAILBIRD, THE (INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) DOUGLAS MACLEAN.....OCT. 9
"Rather obvious, but fairly diverting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Played last week and drew about average crowds. Consensus of opinion was that picture was fair." "Not so good as the McLean-May predecessors. Falls down on story, but acting of this popular pair keeps the interest going until the finish. Did fair business." "They all came—but they were disappointed. In point of business, it did very well. But I don't like to disappoint my people. They expected something as fine and peppy as 'What's Your Husband Doing?' and "Mary's Ankle." MacLean does good work in a typical Charles Ray part—but it was not his sort of role, at all. May very good, also." "Disappointing after seeing '23½ Hours Leave.' Fair business." Each of her pictures does just about the same." "Fair business. Story not much, but star carried it over." "Star attracted many, as she has not been out for some time. Picture not one of her best. Fair amount of business." "A good picture to extra big and big business for two days." "A very entertaining picture and brought big crowds to my house."

LAHOMA (EDGAR LEWIS-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....SEPT. 4
"A good production from all angles."—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—"Fair picture. Better houses last two days than when picture opened."

LOVE MADNESS (J. PARKER READ-HODKINSON) LOUISE GLAUM.....AUG. 21
"Excellent crook story; finely acted and produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew good-sized audiences for seven day run. More sex stuff which appeals to some, but is 'passed by' by most patrons." "A pretty good picture but a poor box-office attraction." 'Name of photoplay drew rather large audiences. Star at her best in her emotional role. Business not bad." "The essence of mellow melodrama. No good as an attraction for those who look for plausibility in a photoplay. Glaum displays her usual intenseness. Not a great picture, but one that will make money wherever patrons like thrills. Played to fair business." "Louise Glaum well liked here and picture presented her in ideal role. Did very good business with it throughout week."

LOVE'S FLAME (FIDELITY PICTURES CO.) THOS. J. CARRIGAN-VIVIENNE OSBORNE.....OCT. 16

"Picture looks artificial through poor direction and acting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew big houses each day. This city has large number of Nazimova 'fans' and these liked the film. The women were exceptionally pleased with it." "Nazimova popular here. House did a normal business only. Lack of punch in previous Nazimova picturets has affected the box office." "The crowds came to see this picture because they are enthusiastic about the star, Nazimova. Drew well for entire week. "Worst Nazimova picture ever produced and shows plainly lack of direction and lack of judgment in picking story. Another picture like this and Nazimova is finished." "One of the best money-getters I've had in a long time. Personally, did not care for the picture, so why worry?"

MADAM X (GOLDWYN) PAULINE FREDERICK.....OCT. 9
"Tremendous drama faultlessly acted and skillfully produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is a fair picture, its only value being the fact that it was made before." "Medium business." "Pauline Frederick's greatest picture and one of the best productions ever offered by Goldwin. Broke house records for box office receipts Sunday and did big business during entire week. Held over for second week's run." "Wonderful production. Pauline Frederick is at her best. This picture went over extra big, making the biggest week in months." "Great picture. Audiences seemed to like this one very much. Big business during run." "The best work Pauline Frederick has ever done. Picture built for acting more than action." "Opened tdo very poor business: competition to circus and Fair as well. But has built steadily up etver since. Business, total, very good. A fine picture—a classic." "Not up to the standard of Nazimova pictures. There are moments in the picture that do not ring true. However, Nazimova followers seemed satisfied." "An average production. Box office returns fair."

"HEARTS ARE TRUMPS"

A Complex Melodrama, Very Well Produced

THIS all star production is an adaptation of an English melodrama by Cecil Raleigh, which, despite the complexity of its plot, makes an interesting production largely because of the direction of Rex Ingram. Mr. Ingram has piled the atmosphere of English nobility on thickly. The picture is full of distinct types which are really modernized Dickensonian characters. The production starts off especially well, with no time lost in creating the interest. Lady Winifred Altcar is secretly married to a gamekeeper on her father's estate. When Lord Altcar learns of this, he has the young husband lashed by his servants. Then comes a lapse of twenty years when Wain, the husband, returns seeking vengeance. The action then centers about the supposed ward of Lady Winifred, who is in reality her daughter. The theme of heredity gambling of the mother mixes with the desired revenge of the father. Then there is a villain pursuing the young girl, and a money lender who is seeking her death in order to collect her insurance money. In addition there is a romance between the girl and a young American artist. There are really enough motives in the picture to supply material for several stories. The general result is that none are emphasized, although together they create suspense and melodrama, swift enough to hold the interest.

The locale of the story varies between England and Switzerland, where the heroine flees from disgrace when her portrait, through the machinations of the villain, is exhibited in the nude. The climax is laid in a heavy storm in the Alps. An avalanche is realistic, and there are some nice views of the Matterhorn.

Alice Terry stands out in the cast by her remarkable beauty. Francelia succeeds fairly well in the difficult task of aging twenty years. Frank Brownlee and Brinsley Shaw give remarkably fine characterizations and Joseph Kilgour is a good heavy. The picture should be acceptable to any audience. The nude portrait scene is not offensive.—Length, 6 reels. —Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Hearts Are Trumps," the Metro all-star production, which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— is a thrilling melodrama adapted from the well-known play by Cecil Raleigh, which when it was first presented proved to be one of the most successful English melodramas. In its screen version it is enacted by a competent and experienced cast, which includes Frank Brownlee, Alice Terry and Francelia Billington.

The story of "Hearts Are Trumps" is laid among the English nobility. It revolves about the Altcar family, in which gambling is a dreaded inheritance. It is hearts that are truly trumps when old Lord Altcar in a last desperate effort to redeem himself financially, stakes his daughter's hand against a sum of money.

Few pictures have more faithfully interpreted English society life than this latest Metro special. The action shifts also to Switzerland where there are some excellent examples of the art of motion picture photography. The scenes of the blizzard in the mountain tops has seldom been equaled on the screen.

"Hearts Are Trumps" will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days. It is expected to fill the house at every performance.

PROGRAM READER

English society life is pictured with perfect detail in "Hearts Are Trumps," the Metro special production which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This picture is an adaptation of the well known melodrama by Cecil Raleigh, which won its greatest success on the London stage. Although it is a picturization of English nobility, it will interest Americans, for a young American artist is the hero of the story. Metro has featured no player in this production. Instead it has featured all. The cast includes Frank Brownlee, Francelia Billington, Winter Hall, Alice Terry, and Brinsley Shaw.

Perfection in detail has been the aim of the producers. The gripping story is unfolded on the screen in the perfectly developed atmosphere of England. The final scenes are laid in Switzerland, and the picture ends with a thrilling scene in the Alps in the midst of a heavy storm and avalanche. "Hearts Are Trumps" will remain at the ———— theatre for ———— days. It is a special attraction that you cannot afford to miss.

SUGGESTIONS

Boost this as a Drury Lane melodrama that will find an appeal in everyone who likes thrilling action and plenty of it. From the title you can arrange stunts such as having a card printed in the form of the ace of hearts with the words "hearts are trumps" printed across it. If your house is in a residential district, you might send a letter to the leaders of the various ladies' afternoon card clubs, stating that "Hearts Are Trumps" is a picture of the highest class and ideal entertainment for a matinee party. Francelia Billington is probably the best known player. If you run a teaser in the press let it read: "Hearts Are Trumps—and the joker deals. Who will win?"

"BEAUTIFULLY TRIMMED"
(Universal)

Mediocre Picture on a Hackneyed Theme

IT'S like taking the bull right by the horns in giving this picture to the exhibitors with such a title. Inasmuch as it isn't publicized as a world-beater those who book it need not think that they have been trimmed to any extent. An uninspired story on a moth-eaten theme—it travels its colorless orb without taxing the spectator into any appreciation of its argument. The idea is the old "army" game of presenting a heroine as a "come-on" agent who will fleece a wealthy prospect of his riches. The obviousness is apparent from the opening flash that she will have a change of heart due to a sentimental feeling and will co-operate with the gentleman being fleeced into turning the tables on the get rich quick promoters. There's the plot of "Beautifully Trimmed" in a nutshell.

The only variation on the time-worn material is the fact that the operations are not conducted from Wall Street, but from the sanctum sanctorum of a pair of oil bandits, one of whom bears the name of Bonzi. The story of Ponzi might make interesting drama, and if this is an attempt to touch upon his promoting methods it is very poorly conceived. The picture relies entirely upon interiors—one of which discloses a saturnalian revel with the hero carrying the "come-on" girl out in caveman fashion—to take her away from evil associates. There is no action and very little incident and the climax is exceedingly tame.

The rich youth gives the promoters a check for the stock and is on the point of having them arrested when he receives word that his investment is sound. So he advises the crooks to pay more attention to their oil wells in the future. He has turned the tables completely and the conclusion shows him willing to forgive the girl for her change of heart. There is a bid for patriotic applause in the representation of the hero. A bit of padding shows him a former aviator in the army—with a flash of speech-making and heroics. Toward the conclusion the villain accuses the girl of being yellow. She says that she has become white. Subsequently the scheming Bonzi declares that he saw red when he pounced upon the hero. This fight, while out of place, is the only red corpuscle in the story. Carmel Myers looks attractive, but has very little to do in the way of acting. Pell Trenton and Irving Cummings are effective as the hero and arch-villain respectively.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture of frenzied finance and the influence of a good love in fashioning character is "Beautifully Trimmed," the Universal feature which will be shown at the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with Carmel Meyers as the star. Miss Meyers is an associate of a pair of crooks who gain a livelihood by get-rich-quick promotions. Their object is to fleece a wealthy young man who formerly served his Uncle Sam as an aviator in the army. The youth falls readily into the trap engineered by Natalie but she finds that his easy manner, his guilelessness and sincerity are factors to be reckoned with.

Eventually she discovers a transformation of her character under the influence of love. So she cooperates with him in frustrating the plans of her evil associates. Thus the tables are turned. The crooks are beaten at their own game. The picture is punctuated with flashes of humor and sentiment. Miss Myers makes a pleasing figure in the role of the young woman whose redemption is effected through love. Her charm and wholesomeness are factors in establishing her popularity. Her support includes Pell Trenton and Irving Cummings, two actors who are always dependable.

PROGRAM READER

She was an associate of two get-rich-quick promoters—one of whom was a disciple of Ponzi. They were determined to fleece a young man by interesting him in fake oil stock, the woman to act as a "come-on" agent. But the tables are turned. How they are turned is spelled in five reels of most interesting drama. How the girl discovers that love is a factor which influences one to right thinking —how she cooperates with the youth in frustrating the plan of her associates— these are touches which offer an hour of satisfying entertainment. Carmel Myers is the star and her charm and wholesomeness do much toward making the picture so attractive. Others in the cast are Irving Cummings and Pell Trenton. "Beautifully Trimmed" will be at the ———— next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have been playing the Carmel Myers pictures you can safely state that she has a winner here. Don't go too strong on the plot. It is a trifle time-worn and might keep certain discriminate patrons away. Simply play up the star, her appealing beauty, the supporting cast and the title. You can state that the picture offers an object lesson to crooks and promoters in general. Tell that a sucker is born every minute. Go after the picture with timely catch lines and make out that the public must be ever wary of the sharps. You might advise them to keep from buying oil, until they have seen this picture.

CATCH LINES

If you are determined to buy an oil stock, have it carefully investigated. Good advice would be to see "Beautifully Trimmed" at this theatre next ————.

"Lewis Sargent duplicates success of 'Huckleberry Finn'"—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A fine production. Business better than usual during run." "Plot of picture good. Good houses entire week." "Given a bit of exploitation, this will go over big. STOP THIEF (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE ..... AUG. 28
"Faithful and intelligent adaptation of famous stage success."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Nothing extra either in business or quality of picture" "This is an entertaining feature and seemed to please the audiences. Business was good during run." "Pleased the majority of my patrons. Average business four days; big business three." "Moore was good in this picture. Business about as usual." "My house plays particularly to the young people and they all like Tom Moore. So business was good and they liked the picture." "Did not go over very well. An average picture."

Exhibitor Comment—"Fine picture. Brought good business." "Great picture. A sure fire money getter. Drew large crowds with large box-office results." "Not very well liked. No box-office value." "By far the best thing this star has done. She always draws well for me but never so well as in this. Would like as many more like it as I can get." "Great stuff." TIGER'S CUB (FOX) PEARL WHITE ..... OCT. 16
"Pearl White makes thoroughly interesting Alaskan picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is the second Pearl White feature. It failed to draw so a Harold Lloyd comedy was added to the program."

TRUANT HUSBAND, THE (ROCKETT FILM CORP.) SPECIAL CAST ..... OCT. 23
"Simple and human is this contribution."—M. P. News.

TRUMPET ISLAND (VITAGRAPH) SPECIAL CAST ..... OCT. 16
"Spectacular melodrama is rich in action and thrills."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A fine picture, pleasing and entertaining. Drew more than usual business." "Very fine picture. Spectacular and exciting. PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

UNTAMED, THE (FOX) TOM MIX ..... SEPT. 4
"First class western melodrama with star in likeable role."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew well during week, but picture replaced Saturday by Pearl White in 'The White Moll.'" "Best Mix picture to date. Orchestra accompaniment helped a lot in making it entertaining. Good box office attraction." "The picture did not bring the usual numbers to the theatre. It is regarded by many as too commonplace." "This is a good feature and we had good business while it was showing." "Mix in good form. Big business three days."

VICE OF FOOLS, THE (VITAGRAPH) ALICE JOYCE ..... NOV. 20
"A well produced society picture weakening in the end."—M. P. News.

VILLAGE SLEUTH, THE (INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) CHARLES RAY ..... SEPT. 25
"Ray scores again as country yokel."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the best pictures Ray has played in. This is a regular picture and is playing to big business right along." "Played it one week to big business one day and average six." "Audiences thought Charles Ray just made for this 'Rube's' part. Business only fair." "Went over big first day but average the rest of the week. Ray always in pleasing pictures." "One of Ray's best productions and its box-office value was quite up to the usual Ray standard, which is saying a good deal." "Not one of Ray's best—but it was clever and a bit different, in point of story, to his usual efforts, while giving him essentially the usual sort of role. Anyway they liked it."

Exhibitor Comment—"Annette Kellerman great favorite here. Picture drew well." "A very entertaining and interesting picture which brought more than usual business." "Interesting picture which brought good business." "From a box-office angle this is a very poor picture. Did not draw at all. Just barely enough to keep on through the week."

WHAT'S YOUR HURRY (PARAMOUNT) WALLACE REID ..... AUG. 28
"Wally Reid and motor truck shine in this one."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A very good production to extra big and big business for two days." "The best picture Reid has turned out this year. Just packed them in. Looks like some fine advertising was slipped over in this one for a certain brand of truck. Local dealers capitalized on it by putting one of the trucks on the street with mammoth signs on it inforraing the public that we would show them what the brutes could do." "Up to the usual Wallace Reid standard and drew big crowds." "Business exceptionally good. Enough laughs to put everyone in good humor for the whole winter. Good, wholesome and entertaining."

Exhibitor Comment—"Fine picture, well acted, which did big business partly aided by the presence of Mildred Harris Chaplin."

YOU NEVER CAN TELL (REALART) BEBE DANIELS ..... OCT. 16
"A real success from every angle."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This picture is very pleasing, box-office receipts about average." "A very pleasing little picture; star has made a place for herself and this picture suits her to a 'T.'" "Bebe Daniels shows that she is a real actress. She had a good production and drew well."
Consensus—"Pleasing picture, average puller."

French Film Conditions

nniversary of Armistice Day, the ilms of the two great processions nd the numerous ceremonies conected with the burial of the Unnown Poilu and the Heart of Gambetta which had taken place hat morning were flashed on the Matin's screen on the boulevards. An enormous crowd collected and heered themselves hoarse as the arious incidents were shown.

The famous French aviation ace, e Romanet made an unexpected ut nevertheless successful film ébut a few days ago. He had just ompleted a flight from the Buc erodrome near Paris and inciently beat the speed record of 309 ilometres an hour and started to nd. He came to ground to his great surprise right in the midst of a group of pretty girls who immediately surrounded him and began to shower congratulations upon him. On the outside of the group he noticed a camera man who was turning his machine vigorously. De Romanet, as he soon discovered, had landed in the middle of an important scene from "The masked Flyingman" a film serial in six episodes. But what was stranger still was that the artists were just then awaiting the return of the film aviator who was due to make a sensational landing but who had been anticipated by de Romanet. He arrived a few minutes after. Among the artists engaged in this serial picture it is interesting to note is Miss Vera Amazar of the Metropolitan Opera, New York, who made her début in the films on this occasion.

The French producer, Louis Mercanton, informs me that for his new film "Phroso" founded on the novel by Anthony Hope and in which the American actress Malvina Longfellow, a direct descendant of the Poet, plays the leading role, he has combed the whole of Greece for his costumes and has spared no expense in collecting his material so that his scenes may correspond in every detail with the period and the atmosphere in which they should be played. Included in the caste is M. Capellani, the brother of the producer who is so well known in America.

Owing to the serious lack of coal in France many motion picture theatre proprietors have been forced to limit the heating of their houses to the very minimum. This enforced restriction has prompted certain critics to expend themselves in various forms of sarcastic advice such as "Heat your theatres before exhibiting your master-pieces" and "If you desire to retain your your clientèle, first take care of their health" and again "The warmth dispersed by the sight of luxurious banquets is not enough; add a little coal to your programs." One suffering critic whose wit at least was not congealed by the freezing atmosphere, dismissed a program with these words "Theatre not heated and no charge for the Cold in the Head. Drama in 175 handkerchiefs, played by all those present. Very bad!"

The Production Barometer in France shows the following figures for the past week. French Films, 4,800 metres compared with 4,552 for the preceding week. Foreign Films, 18,868 metres against 14,676 for the previous week. The French production represents therefore about 25 per cent of the total. There is much to be said for the dissatisfaction of the French producers!—FRANCIS J. TUCKFIELD.

SOMETHING FOR YOUR BOX OFFICE

J. Parker Read, Jr., in presenting, Louise Glaum in "Love" has given his young emotional star a role in which she forges ahead of her previous best and one which will draw her immeasurably closer to her millions of admirers.—George T. Pardy, Exhibitors Trade Review.

A rich and colorful production. J. Parker Read, Jr., never does things by halves. Gorgeous interiors, bizarre effects and effective lighting contribute splendid atmosphere. "Love" should make a good audience picture.—Laurence Reid, Motion Picture News.

Opulent in spectacular appeal, "Love" is an "easiest way" drama given expensive and extravagant treatment. Louis Joseph Vance has provided a well written scenario that carries the action up to a thrilling climax. —Jessie Robb, Moving Picture World.

"Love" permits Louise Glaum to do the kind of acting in which she has no peer upon the American screen. Contains all the qualities which have given her pictures a place peculiarly their own. Mr. Read has mounted the picture sumptuously.—S. M. Weller, New York Review.

Talk about the lavish production and say it is one of the finest shown this season. You will not be stretching a point. Some of the sets are gorgeous in the extreme, including a shower and pool off the heroines boudoir. They give you a flash of Louise Glaum under the shower.—Wid's.

Mr. Hiram Abrams,
President, United Artists, Corp.,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York.

Dear Mr. Abrams:

I think perhaps you would like to know that in the week just ended with "Doug's" picture, "The Mark of Zorro", all attendance records for the motion picture industry for a single week were smashed here. The receipts were $48,103.43 and attendance was 94,501 persons.

These figures are astounding in themselves and merely indicate what is possible with a combination of this great star, a wonderful picture and the theatre itself, and I think it merited my opinion that it is perhaps the best thing that "Doug" has ever done. I heard nothing but praise and praise and to the best of my knowledge not one single complaint or kick was registered during the entire week.

This is a record that the Capitol is extremely proud of and I am sure that Mr. Fairbanks and the Big Four Corporation will share with us in our pride that in this theatre was established a new attendance record for motion pictures that only a year ago was undreamed of.

Yours very sincerely,

An Open Letter to All Independent Distributors of Super Special Photo Plays

By WILLIAM L. SHERRILL

For seven years we have consistently fought to maintain a high class independent production unit. During that time such features as "The Witching Hour," "Conquest of Canaan," "God's Man," "Once to Every Man," and others, have been produced by us and distributed through independent exchanges and, I believe, with profit to themselves. Now the time has arrived when I must decide how to distribute the EIGHT SUPER SPECIALS we are producing with MISS LILLIAN GISH. My first desires and inclinations were to follow the same mode of independent distribution because I believe in it, and because through your co-operation we have profited in the past by it. However, with such a star as Miss Gish and the magnitude of the productions we have planned with her, we have naturally been approached by some of the leading national distributing organizations, urging the time-worn arguments, which I need not repeat here, against independent or state right distribution.

However, I am still of the opinion that every indication, every change in this business points directly toward independent productions, independent distributors and independent exhibitors.

There was never a more psychological time for you than now. BY OUR DETERMINATION TO INDEPENDENTLY DISTRIBUTE THESE ATTRACTIONS, WE ARE CHALLENGING THE HUE AND CRY RAISED BY YOU THAT WHEN AN INDEPENDENT PRODUCER HAS SOMETHING OF EXTRAORDINARY MERIT THEY RUSH TO A NATIONAL DISTRIBUTOR WHO IS PREPARED TO LAY DOWN THE COST OF PRODUCTION PLUS A PROFIT IN ADVANCE.

We have now everything that you have ever hoped to be able to secure:

LILLIAN GISH, CONCEDED THE GREATEST MOTION PICTURE ACTRESS LIVING. JEROME STORM, ONE OF THE FEW GREAT DIRECTORS. A WONDERFUL STORY BY MADAME "FRED" DE GRESAC. A SUPER CAST CHOSEN BECAUSE OF ABILITY AND TYPE AND A STUDIO ORGANIZATION SECOND TO NONE.

Surely this combination should prove an open door to profit and success.

While I admit I faltered at times, I am solidly back to independent distribution, provided I am not compelled to suffer a financial loss because of my faith in you. Yet, the die is cast, the decision is final. I hope it will mean substantial profit to us all. I know it cannot mean a loss. I therefore offer you the opportunity to contract for eight LILLIAN GISH super special productions to be released four a year. Delivery is guaranteed on time, both as to production and advertising matter, dignified, unique, yet startling. So you may contract with your exhibitors with the same guarantee. The first production is to be ready for release February 15th. I request those interested that they communicate with me in such a manner as they feel the situation justifies.

(Signed) A. L. Frohman

MR. PRODUCER:

Are You Interested in a LOCATION PRODUCING SYSTEM that is Furnished You Free?

THEN

STOP! LOOK! READ!

Jacksonville, Florida, realizing its meritorious claims for making itself the

THIRD MOTION PICTURE PRODUCING CENTER

Due to its climate and scenic advantages and most of all ITS PROXIMITY TO NEW YORK, a short distance of only 30 hours is now Picturizing with professional motion picture camera men.

HUNDREDS AND HUNDREDS OF BEAUTIFUL LOCATIONS

All over this part of Florida and placing them in Folios. These pictures will be indexed showing exact location and how to get there, also the time of the day and also the time of the month the picture was taken. Several copies of these Folios will be on exhibition in New York City for the convenience of the producers. Now then: Does your picture require dock scenes—here they are of different variety—or a Desert, a Beach, a Ferry Boat, Cotton Fields, Factory, a Log Cabin or a Millionaire's Residence, Sea Shore Hotels or Tourist Hotels, New England Farm Houses or Southern Plantations, a Wind Mill or Water Wheel, scenes with Moss and Plenty of Palms or scenes without Moss and Palms suggesting Northern settings, an Ocean Liner entering a Dock or sailing out to sea.—Here it is all before you.

YOU CAN SIT AT YOUR DESK IN NEW YORK AND SCENALIZE YOUR STORY

No need sending your location man out under heavy expense and time and then often be disappointed because he doesn't see the locations you have in mind.

You will find most any conceivable kind of a location in these Folios. Make your selection and send your companies down and Jacksonville will do the rest.

DOES THIS APPEAL TO YOU PRODUCERS AS A PRACTICAL PROPOSITION

We will show you that Florida has more beautiful locations and a greater variety than you ever dreamt of. TO DO THIS COSTS A LOT OF MONEY BUT WE SPEND IT GLADLY IF IT WILL BE OF SERVICE TO THE PRODUCERS. THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, THE CITY GOVERNMENT, BANKING INTERESTS, THE MERCHANTS AND EVERYBODY ELSE IS BEHIND THIS MOVEMENT AND THE PRODUCER WHO COMES WILL MEET WITH HEARTY COOPERATION FROM ALL THESE CLASSES.

Harold Lloyd

in the Comedy Special

"Number, Please?"

THE first of the Lloyd Comedy Specials was issued only twelve months ago.

Within the year it has become evident both to exhibitors and the public that Lloyd has become the leading screen comedian of the world, and Hal Roach the greatest of all comedy directors and producers.

Furthermore, and this is very important, these two have shown that pure comedy is possible without vulgarity; and that true art in acting, direction and story is better than crude slapstick.

It would be fine if it were possible to show you the hundreds of enthusiastic exhibitor letters,– the multitude of highly laudatory newspaper and magazine clippings on the subject of these comedies.

It is impossible, but they exist. They agree that the Lloyd Special Comedies are the best on the market today.

BEN BOLT
Carl Laemmle presents Allen Holubar's great UNIVERSAL-JEWEL Production De-Luxe -Starring

IN
ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN
BEALS

ONCE to every exhibitor comes the chance to exploit a perfect picture by perfect exploitation—a low-cost promotion plan that fits the picture absolutely and is thoroughly practical. Here is that plan—a proven success in every detail. Use it—and use it now.

The Super-Herald

Get today from your Universal-Jewel Exchange a copy of the "ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN," Ben Bolt Super-Herald, a 4-page, 9 x 12, artistic combination of song-music and advertising. Give these away to your patrons for one week prior to, and during, your showing of this screen triumph. Universal-Jewel sells you these super-helps at cost—and gives you free the same quantity that you buy.

The Singer

Secure, or have your Universal-Jewel Exchange secure for you, the services of a woman singer for your showing. Follow the plan used by Ascher Brothers of Chicago—the aria from "Faust" in Reel 3—"Home, Sweet Home" in Reel 6, where Dorothy Phillips leaves for home, sung behind the curtain—and "Ben Bolt," sung behind the curtain, near the end.

The Phonograph

Where a singer is not obtainable, use a phonograph for these three effects and tie up with your local music store for publicity. Use Geraldine Farrar's rendering of "Ben Bolt."

IF YOU WILL FOLLOW OUT THIS PRACTICAL LOW-COST EXPLOITATION PLAN YOU WILL CROWD YOUR HOUSE AS IT HAS NEVER BEEN CROWDED BEFORE. SEE YOUR UNIVERSAL-JEWEL EXCHANGE TODAY.

From "filler" to "feature"—that's the story of the News Reel in your theatre. And that's exactly why "good enough" is not good enough—as your own Box-office will quickly tell you. You need for your News Feature precisely the same high-class entertainment that you give in your dramas and comedies. The Key To Independence

The KEY is a powerful stiff uppercut—straight to the jaw of would-be film Czars.

Let's be candid! What Webster thinks of the word "Independence" is one thing. To strip it of its camouflage is another. Our definition is lengthy but it eliminates the bunk that reminds us of the hokum cigar band.

INDEPENDENCE for exhibitors means simply having two legs to stand upon—guts enough to stand upon them and to tell those birds parading under banners of false promises to "Go To!"

THE INDEPENDENT FILM ASS'N was formed for the purpose of combating camouflaged interests and furnishing you with real productions—real legs to stand upon. Now then, dammit, have you the guts to talk back and support our policy of supporting you? If you have—you've got the KEY! Use it—OPEN THE DOOR OF THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY IN THE HISTORY OF FILMDOM—the square deal you have always got and always will get by dealing with the Independent Exchange.

LEO WHITE

"RAZZIN' THE JAZZ"

Whoopee! Bills, thrills, frills, and what did LEO have in his still ? ? ?

And those creamy, bare, natural cuticle skins encased in leopard hides and thumbnail bathing suits. Oh! Pity the blind.

Two reels of mirth provoking screams every two weeks

Book your play dates early. Wire your nearest exchange for option on entire series. You may still grab them off by quick action.

Leo White's name is associated in the mind of every picture fan with laughs, happiness and fun. This is because of his prominent part in Chaplin's Essanay and Mutual Comedies. Leo White's Pinnacle Comedies are little gems of merit. Ask your local independent exchange about release dates on the first Leo White Comedy.

NEAL HART

IN HIS LATEST TRIUMPH

"SKYFIRE"

A story of the wild and woodsy Canadian Northwest literally bulging and bursting with daring thrills and excitement.

The big feature of SKYFIRE is the Aurora Borealis or Northern Lights scene, which has successfully been woven into the plot of Mr. Hart's latest Pinnacle production.

Book SKYFIRE through your independent exchange man and place an option on all NEAL HART pictures to follow. An entire year's output of attractions extraordinary.

WATCH OUT FOR OLD FILMS!

One of the surest ways—if not the only way—to keep from getting stung on ancient, moth-eaten pictures which have lain on the shelves for several years without a market, and are being dragged forth now and offered to the state right exchanges because of the present big demand—IS TO GET YOUR BOOKINGS FROM EXCHANGES HAVING MEMBERSHIP IN THE INDEPENDENT FILMS ASSOCIATION. These exchanges are buying the brand new, just completed productions and booking them to you. For instance, you are booking "Skyfire," the second Neal Hart picture, while "Danger Valley," the third, is being printed, and "Totem Law," the fourth, is being filmed at the studio.

How Many of Baltimore's 105 Screen Theatres Show YOUR Pictures - and How Often?

WE have just completed a survey of the Motion Picture situation in Baltimore, which will be valuable to every man or firm interested in a wider distribution of films and greater profits from them.

Our book detailing this investigation contains an enormous amount of invaluable information, covering every film theatre in the city of Baltimore, the name of the theatre, its manager, seating capacity, prices, type of projection machine used, etc., outlines a new and improved method of merchandising, gives facts as the result of a direct investigation with those who go to see motion pictures—how often they go, where and why?—and further possibilities of the market based on these tables.

But the big salient thought our investigation contains is that practically the entire expense of producing a film has gone into it whether it is shown ten times or fifty times in a market. With this in view our survey makes an extremely incisive suggestion for getting double or triple the present number of rentals out of a film, and for keeping it working weeks even months after it now goes onto the shelf.

When a man sells a million more bars of soap he is up against the necessity of buying more material of every sort, increasing his labor supply, in fact, increasing his expenses generally, almost up to the point of his increased business. But a film enterprise is practically at no increased expense whatever, so far as the product itself is concerned when doubling or tripling the sales.

The firm acting on the suggestion contained in this survey and market analysis first, will get the greatest benefit out of it at the lowest expense. The more firms that go into it in the long run, the better, but the pioneers will unquestionably get the " cream " at very moderate cost.

This is a book which will appeal intensely to the biggest men in the Motion Picture Industry. Men like Mr. Lasky, Mr. Laemmle, Mr. Smith, Mr. Brunet, Mr. Selznick, Mr. Fox, Mr. Griffith, Mr. Zukor, Mr. Goldwyn, Mr. Rowland, Mr. Hodkinson, Mr. Williams, Mr. Cole, Mr. Abrams, Mr. Price, Mr Cohen, Mr. Hammons, Mr. Hoffmann, Mr. Waters, Mr. King and others at the head of the biggest film enterprises, or in charge of their advertising, will find food for thought, serious consideration, and we believe incentive to action, in this valuable survey, which we will gladly send to every executive in the film business who will write for it on his business stationery.

The Great Stage Success That Established a Broadway Record!

"The Great Lover" is a title that should interest every live-wire exhibitor in the industry. There are few popular plays that have been quite as popular as this sensational comedy drama which played to Broadway crowds for over a year with Leo Ditrichstein in the stellar role.

The leading figure in this skillfully directed production is, as the title indicates, "a great lover." Women could not resist Jean Paurel, the opera singer, whose conquests embraced every feminine type. Women admirers flocked to the stage door to shower him with bouquets and love notes.

Gentlemen:

First I want to thank you for selling the Fotoplayer to me, as we have done away with a great deal of musicians' grief, and the music is better than when we used a 3 piece orchestra.

I can safely recommend the Fotoplayer to a brother exhibitor who is running a straight picture house as being better than the orchestra that the small town manager can afford to keep in his theatre, and you can have music to suit the action of the screen, which is impossible to get with an orchestra and a daily change of pictures.

Yours very truly,

Do You Find It Hard To Get New and Novel Comedies?

Then read what an exhibitor says of The Toonerville Trolley Series:

December 2, 1920.

Mr. H. O. Schwalbe,
Associated First National Pictures, Inc.,
6 & 8 West 48th St., New York City.

My dear Mr. Schwalbe:

Last week at our Garden Theatre, Paterson, N. J. we played "THE TOONERVILLE TROLLEY THAT MEETS ALL TRAINS," the first of the TOONERVILLE TROLLEY comedy series.

This comedy caused more favorable comment from our patrons than any comedy we have ever played in the theatre. The comedy character played by Dan Mason was exceptionally well done, and as Mr. Mason happens to be quite a well known burlesque and vaudeville comedian his popularity helped the comedy a great deal. We had numerous inquiries from our patrons desiring to know when the next TOONERVILLE picture was coming.

I certainly wish to congratulate the producers of this picture, as good novel comedies are very scarce at this time.

Very truly yours,

"A Big Story, Packed With Action; The Kind That Builds Patronage"

It will pay you to read every word of their review — Exhibitors Herald

"'The Scoffer'—vividly dramatic picture fiction. Man and woman drama for the serious of mind, clean, convincing, powerful. A strong story artistically but firmly presented. A capable cast in which every character is a type and most are worthy of star prominence. Allan Dwan's best work to date.

"It is not to be considered an every day nor a one day picture. It has the qualities that make for increasing patronage during an engagement. It should be given an opportunity to exert its business building appeal.

"If, as claimed, 'the story is the thing,' 'The Scoffer' is a great picture.

"If an evenly balanced and exceptionally capable cast is considered the guarantee of good entertainment, the production is one in a hundred.

"If artistry, combined with forcefulness in setting, direction, photography, acting and subtitle are considered the essentials of the 'big picture,' Allan Dwan's First National production ranks high in that class.

"James Kirkwood, Noah Beery, Philo McCullough, Rhea Mitchell, Mary Thurman, John Barton, Eugenie Besserer, Bernard Durning, Ward Crane and Georgie Stone are the players given mention in the cast of characters and the work of any one of them surpasses what is commonly accepted as stellar quality. Realism is the dominant note throughout the picture and it has been attained by skilfully mixing the commonplace and the bizarre.

"The story is big, modern, packed with action and intensely unfolded. The widely misemployed 'gripping' fits perfectly."

A Very Pertinent Question

AN exhibitor asks us the following: — While personally I think the RITCHEY posters are the most attractive, colorful and forceful, and I get them with a great number of films, how does it happen that there still are some prominent producing companies who use posters of other makes? They certainly are interested in the success of their own production, at least as much as anybody else is. Does it not follow, that, in their judgment, the other makes are either better or just as good?

The answer:—No, it does not follow. Such producers know that their posters are inferior but they use them for reasons which are good and sufficient from their standpoint. Here is an illustration of what actually happened: A conspicuous producing company was buying RITCHEY posters; in the course of time they found themselves under great financial stress. A lithographer offered to make their posters without any obligation on their part, in return for the privilege of selling them to the exhibitor direct through the exchanges. In addition, he was willing to pay a cash bonus. The company was greatly in need of relief and was practically forced to sign up for a period of considerable length. It was bad business, but fairly safe, as they banked on the exhibitor not knowing the difference, and not having anything to say in the matter anyway.

There are various other reasons and instances where the poster is being used not on its merits but for some private and hidden consideration. This condition is very harmful for our industry in general and the exhibitor in particular.

We will fight this condition with the object of having posters bought and sold on their merits only. In this, we ought to have the cooperation of the entire industry. Our aim is to eliminate the distribution of posters that are so bad as to be, from an advertising standpoint, worse than useless. When the people responsible for such distribution are clearly recognized that end will be achieved.

VOL. XXII DECEMBER 18, 1920 No. XXVI

"Give and Take" in Business

THE daily scene in front of the Godfrey Building, New York, where the salesman grabs the customer on the sidewalk—is only paralleled in all New York City in front of the low-grade clothing shops of Baxter Street and Seventh Avenue.

It is a pretty bad advertisement of the industry. We like to group ourselves with the leading ones. Can anyone imagine this sort of street barter going on with railroads, steel, ore, automobiles, etc?

This is the sign we hang out in front of the largest film building in the City where exists headquarters of practically the entire American film industry.

Is it a true sign of our trade?

It has been explained to us that this outlandish method of sales is confined to New York City and to all inferior kinds of film.

Unfortunately the latter is not true. Many pictures are traded in on the Godfrey curb and with the same wild grabbing of the customer's coat lapels and with the same hoarse shouting and give and take tactics which the writer in his whole experience can only associate with the quarreling that goes on over a fish-peddlers' cart in Soho Square, London.

But the worst of it is—and the point of it is—that this strange scene is a physical manifestation—exaggerated but none the less true—of the selling policy today of motion pictures throughout the length and breadth of the land.

In other words it's—barter. Just that. That's our selling method. You may refine it in many ways. It is not necessary to grab the customer, jam him into a doorway and yell him into submission. But, however it's done, the policy is just the same. It's—get whatever you can, and grab what you get. Same way on either side—exhibitor from salesman, salesman from exhibitor. They have to do it.

And it's a mighty bad thing all around.

It has been said that the greatest fault with this business—the one thing that distinguishes it from all other business—is a complete lack of confidences between its branches. It's true. Confidence not only does not exist—it is displaced by positive hostility and suspicion.

But how can you have anything else where barter is the basis of all dealing when there is such an utter lack of any stable value that salesman and customer have no point of sales contact, but on the other hand are actually led into a poker game with a range of value from the sky to the water.

We have price-cutting in other lines of business; in this, we have no prices.

In other lines they shade the penny—the dollar maybe. In our's we shade prices by the several hundreds of dollars on the single picture rental.

This lack of any basis of value is bad enough in itself; but we contend that its consequences, its constant breeding of misunderstanding and distrust is far worse and farther reaching. It is positively destructive.

We have suggested percentage as the cure. For so doing we have been accused of everything from ignorance to treachery. We believe, as sincerely as ever, that some day some form of percentage will be adopted to the great good of the entire business, and that in the meantime, it will still remain impossible for the best selling system to fix a fair and satisfactory price on each different picture with its different story, direction and star for the widely different towns of the widely different section of this broad country.

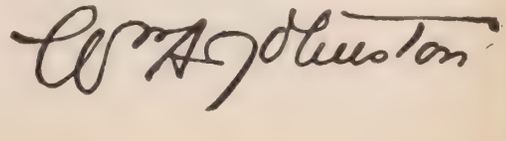
Jacksonville Welcomes You

JACKSONVILLE offers an attractive quota of advantages to the producer. Climate, scenery—of a variety that lacks only mountains and snow; nearness to New York—so that a week-end trip back and forth makes a loss of only half a business day. But best of all we like the spirit of its merchants, its Chambers of Commerce—their offer of full co-operation, their evident desire not to take advantage of motion picture expenditure but to join hands everywhere in making it less. We predict that producers in Jacksonville won't find it necessary, as in Los Angeles, to form their own buying and renting concerns.



Snapshots

Around the Clock with Wm. A. Johnston

Rufus S. Cole. An Optimist. Says there's absolutely nothing wrong with the business. We've got to adjust ourselves to the situation, that's all. Robertson-Cole started cleaning house several months ago—by curtailing production and concentrating on quality. Fewer and better pictures in other words. Consequence is that last week's receipts, even eliminating "Kismet," were greatest in history of their film business. Believes that this is a straight commercial business—governed by regular business laws. That's the way he runs his. And, evidently, he's right. Says you may succeed temporarily by short cuts, but you'll go on the rocks in the long run—unless you trim your sails to the straight, long course. Right! Robertson-Cole will celebrate its anniversary in January in the new and beautiful Robertson-Cole Building, corner 48th Street and Seventh Avenue.

William de Mille. Our hat is off! His new picture: "Midsummer Madness." A Winner! Artistically, dramatically, and from the box-office standpoint. Some pictures are reviewer pictures; some are box-office pictures. This is both. Proving it is possible. Wonder why he only started to make pictures a year and a half ago. Don't like to overestimate but think perhaps he has been waiting for pictures to catch up to the kind he evidently can make. Anyway, we call this the photo-drama of the future. Not a bit of "movie" stuff in it. No bolstering, nor artificial aids. Has all the hold on an audience, all the expressive acting, all the unity and construction of the best spoken drama on Broadway—and more than most, together with artistry of setting, the completeness of which the stage can never give. Predict a long run at the Criterion, and a big incentive to others to do likewise. Happy selection of appeal—this. Just as "Over the Hill" hits the mother-child theme, so "Midsummer Madness" goes to the heart of the almost universal husband-wife problem. And it will arouse much discussion and do a universal good.

The Directors' Dinner. Annual dinner of M. P. D. A. Words of praise from all sides over this affair. Best lot of speeches ever heard at any picture dinner. Augustus Thomas, Toastmaster. Speeches by James Vincent, Sophia Irene Loeb, Leslie Mason, Wm. A. Brady (introduced as Alice Brady's father), Dr. Frank Crane, John C. Freund, Editor of Musical America; Sydney S. Cohen, President La Guardia of the Board of Aldermen, Dr. Martin of the People's Forum and head of the National Board of Review; and last but a star as usual, Senator James Walker. Among those present: J. Stuart Blackton, William Fox, J. D. Williams, R. A. Rowland, Barrett McCormack, William Farnum, Seena Owens, June Caprice, Kathlyn Williams, June Elvidge, notable directors, etc. Wish we could publish every speech. Each from different angle, each remarkably good. Said Toastmaster Thomas in closing: "If your Directors' Association had accomplished nothing else than the holding of this dinner you have done a good year's work."

Richard W. Rowland. Frankest man in the industry. Talks straight out about everything—himself and his company included. Always refreshing to meet him. No vanity, egotism, jealousy or camouflage. Never knocks the other fellow. Recall his famous epigram when the stars broke loose a few years ago: "Well, the lunatics have now got control of the asylum." Says directors are now running the institution.

Hy Mayer. Leaving for Europe. Taking over his one-man company—himself—to make more Travel-laughs. They "educate with a laugh." You know them. If not you ought to. Half photograph—half cartoon. Pictures of daily life—human interest. Hy Mayer knows life and how to draw it and where to photograph it. Featured at Capitol theatre. Hy Mayer has been cartooning for 35 years—Life, Puck, ten years of full pages for New York Sunday Times. Says motion picture is new, quick, vivid means of wide appeal—for him. Satirist, raconteur, good fellow. Want to see his European stuff.

Capitol Theatre. Note that Doug. Fairbanks' "Mark of Zorro" makes the record run here of any picture house to date in this country—19,527 admissions and $11,706.32 in one day's receipts. Note also the Capitol has booked "Passion," which means another big run. Fine business! How about recognition for S. L. Rothapfel, the man who puts 'em on? And is it realized that S. L. is now making his biggest of all Broadway successes?

Frank L. Newman. Comes to bat with the best business statement to date. Says his Newman theatre, like every other big theatre, is giving public today three times, anyway, its money's worth. Says business is all right, no reduction in admission prices is needed—and business will continue all right provided the producer gives the theatre the best possible pictures brains and money can make. We submit this situation to (1) producers who own their theatres and give preference to their own pictures, (2) to producers who exclude from picture theatres their best pictures, (3) to producers who think mere footage goes these days. And then we ask them: "Can you afford to jeopardize your retail outlet at this time, or should you make every last effort to give your exhibitor your fullest support?"

Rumors. Question put to us by a prominent Wall Street banker of sound, conservative type: "Say, do you fellows up-town make pictures or rumors? Never heard of such stuff as pours into our offices by mail and telephone. Just enough of plausibility to suggest source in trade, but all of them absurd to man on inside. What's wrong? Why the motive? Where do you get all the time for gossip? Haven't these rumor-makers their own business to attend to? Haven't they any faith in or loyalty to the picture business?" Too much of a question for us. We pass it along to the rumor-mongers.

Prohibition. Asked by Anti-Saloon League to furnish figures—for propaganda purposes—as to what effect prohibition has had on motion picture theatre. Sorry couldn't oblige. Told them it was too mixed up with higher wages, return of soldiers from war, war and post-war psychology, better pictures, better theatres, better exhibitors, etc., etc., etc. Was tempted to ask back for figures as to just how much prohibition exists.

Lord's Day Alliance. Suggestion to the intellectuals back of this movement: that they devote their efforts not to making people rest on Sunday but to making them work on week-days. Great idea here. Work! Solution of high prices, Bolshevism, high picture rentals, production cost, Hotel Astor rumor-mongers, business pessimists, directors, actors. Let's have a little work!

A. S. Kirkpatrick. Excellent letter in New York Times stating that Robertson-Cole will not exclude its specially big pictures from picture houses. Fine! This firm deserves thanks of industry. Too much of the other idea—namely, of keeping pictures out of picture houses just because they are above average. Do we want to make our picture theatres a dumping ground for mediocre film? If so, how are they to meet the present combination of public economy and increased theatre admissions?

Hits and Misses at Present Film Rental Policies

Basis of Payment Outlined by the "Middlemen"

[EDITOR'S NOTE: The following letters, addressed to William A. Johnston, editor of the NEWS, are in response to his invitation to members of the trade to express their views on the problem of establishing an equitable system of rentals. The subject was treated by Mr. Johnston in an editorial appearing in the November 6th issue of the NEWS under the caption of "The Sales Manager's Opportunity." The publication of this editorial was the occasion of Mr. Johnston's invitation for an exchange of views.]

A Plan Already Tested

The following letter was received from George R. Meeker, who worked out a plan for the distribution of government pictures. Mr. Meeker writes:

"Having been at various times in my motion picture career in the shoes of him who you so aptly term 'the backbone of the business'—i. e., the eighty per center—I believe that I can appreciate many of the problems with which he is confronted at this time. A careful study of the most important of these can, I believe, lead to but one conclusion, and that is, if these problems are so vital as to mean success or failure to eighty per cent of one branch of an industry, they must of necessity be equally vital to not only the other twenty per cent of that particular branch, but every other branch of the industry as well.

"It has taken several years to develop present conditions, and we can hardly expect to correct them over night. When they are corrected it won't be the result of what the small exhibitor has accomplished alone. It will be what the small exhibitor and the big exhibitor, the producer and the distributor have all accomplished together. It's going to take real honest-to-God co-operation. It's going to mean a real cards-on-the-table policy. The methods are going to be drastic, but the results are going to justify all that must have gone before.

"If you will remember, I worked out a plan for the distribution of the government pictures. I do not profess to say that this identical plan is the answer to your question, but I am sincerely of the opinion that it contains the basis of a plan which would go far to correct existing conditions. Putting it into operation would be a revolutionary step, but, after all, the results are what count.

"In our government plan of rentals we rated 'America's Answer' as a 25 per cent premium picture, feeling that in the majority of cases it would draw that amount more to the box office than the average receipts of say the preceding six months. In other words, if an exhibitor's box office had averaged $50 per day, we felt that this picture would draw $62.50, $12.50 over his average. Of this gross amount, we asked, as rental one-third, or, in this case, $20.83.

"Doubtless our premium rating was wrong. Doubtless our proportion of division too high or low. It was in this case guesswork, pure and simple, as we had no way of accurately figuring the picture's value or what was a fair per cent of division for the government and for the exhibitor. Under these circumstances, it would not have been surprising if the plan had utterly failed, but as a matter of fact it didn't. It proved satisfactory in the majority of cases, as the letters received by the government from exhibitors bear witness. One of these came to Mr. Hart from a small exhibitor and contained the request that the government try and have all motion pictures sold that way, as it gave him a square deal.

"However, as I pointed out, earlier in this letter, any solution, to be efficient, must work in all directions. To suggest a plan, which merely shifts a burden, does not help to any great extent. How, then, about the producer, distributor and the first-run exhibitor? How would they fare were such a plan in operation? Very badly, at least, according to the ideas they expressed about the plan at that time. Let us analyze a bit and see if they would, assuming, of course, that certain necessary changes be made to better fit the plan for commercial use.

"According to the way quotas are figured now, each territory must return its per cent of a total, regardless of whether that per cent is equitable or not, on the particular picture in question. In other words, the assumption is that every star or every picture has the same relative drawing power in every locality. This, with one or two possible exceptions, seems to be absurd and entirely without balance. To meet it, many and many a salesman has been forced to resort to pretty strenuous methods or fall by the wayside. Even if he has succeeded he has probably failed in good, sound business. For no good merchandiser wants to load his customer's shelves with goods that can't be sold at a profit.

"Suppose, therefore, we assume, for the sake of argument, that a universal demand in the same degree does not exist for any star or any picture. Assume that Denver and New York do not see through the same spectacles. What one can sell at a profit the other can only buy for a loss. Should their rentals be figured by the same ratio, regardless of results, or should they both buy at prices which would leave them a fair margin of profit on their investment?

"Now, let us go a little further and assume that we have before us the average receipts of say 100 Denver exhibitors and 100 New York exhibitors for a period of three months. That the average in both cases is $100 per day. That in Denver, whenever Miss Mary Smith appeared in a picture, the receipts rose to an average of $105, whereas in New York, whenever she appeared they rose to $125. Wouldn't this prove rather conclusively that she was worth a premium of 5 per cent in Denver and a premium of 25 per cent in New York, and wouldn't it serve as a pretty good basis for an exhibitor to determine just how much he could afford to pay for Miss Smith's next production. In other words, to revert to the basis of the government plan, each production would stand on its reputation in the past and be sold for what it was proven to be worth, and each would pay at an agreed-upon rate, a certain per cent of his average receipts, plus that premium or minus that discount which results had proven to be such. Just what the percentage should be is, of course, something which would have to be carefully worked out, but with everyone working to one end, it probably wouldn't be as difficult as it may seem at the first glance. When this rate has been finally established it should be standardized throughout the entire country. This is perfectly logical, as the premium or discount basis, which will naturally be differ-

Reaffirming his "strong and earnest opposition to censorship of motion picture theatres" in a letter to Willard Patterson of Atlanta under date of December 3rd, Governor-elect Thomas W. Hardwick of Georgia has renewed the pledges made to exhibitors of that state at the recent gubernatorial election.

Although he had the support of only one single newspaper in Atlanta and of very few of the newspapers in the state, he was elected by a pronounced majority largely through the whole-hearted action of Georgia exhibitors, who abandoned for the occasion the principle of keeping politics from the screen and utilized the silver sheet to the fullest advantage of the candidate who had come out unreservedly as opposed to censorship.

"In pursuance of our personal conversation of yesterday," writes the Governor-elect to Mr. Patterson, "I am writing to you to reaffirm my strong and earnest opposition to the proposed censorship of our moving picture theatres.

"Freedom of speech, freedom of thought and freedom of expression are among the fundamental principles of real Americans, and it seems to me that the movement to establish a Board to censor pictures is merely another manifestation of that over regulation that everything and everybody has been so much troubled with in recent years."

S. Barrett McCormick, who has been manager of the Rivoli theatre, Toledo, O., since its opening last summer, has resigned his position to take over the management of the new Ambassador theatre in Los Angeles, which will be opened in February.

The Ambassador, while primarily First National, will show, with all the artistry possible, the foremost productions from the various studios. It will be the releasing point for the greatest pictures, and "Ambassador" production is to be to the picture world what the Metropolitan is to the opera.

The theatre, which will seat 600, will be presided with all facilities for elaborate production, and orchestra, musical setting, ballets and lighting arrangement will permit the creation of effects which raise pictures to the realm of art.

Before leaving for Los Angeles, Mr. McCormick will go to New York to arrange for the engagement of well known musicians, dancers and artists to constitute the staff of the theatre and assist in carrying out his plans for artistic prologues, settings and presentation.. Every picture is to be shown surrounded with the best which the country can give in the way of music, pantomime or dance.

In addition to the Ambassador theatre, which will have an admission charge of two dollars, and give but two performances daily, Mr. McCormick will have charge of the Kinema theatre, one of the largest picture houses on the Coast, with a seating capacity of about 2,500.

ent in such territory, will automatically adjust the values of each star or production.

"I think that you will agree with me that such a plan would be of great value to exhibitors, the big ones as well as the small ones. It will be an assurance to the little fellow that the big first runs are bearing their fair share of rentals and enable them to secure the pictures they want at a price commensurate with their worth It will insure the big first runs that the "backbone of the business" is on a solid fundation, which, in turn, must mean a solider foundation for themselves.

"And now as to the producer. I mean the legitimate ones. Would such a plan not insure him a far wider distribution of his product? Would it not more firmly establish accurate values for his stars and prices for their services, beyond which not only he, but all others, dare not go? Would it not enable him to explain more intelligently and prove more conclusively to his bankers the values of his yet unreleased productions? Would it not also enable him to reconstruct his sales policy in such a manner as to have it compare more favorably than it does to day with the sales policies of the leaders in other great industries? I am more than convinced that it would, and I feel that you will agree with me.

Viewpoint of Independent

The following letter was received from Jesse J. Goldberg, general manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation. Mr. Goldberg writes:

"My view-point is dissociated from those possessed by sales executives connected with the so-called 'program' distributors. Mine is the 'independent' mind, and with that mind I have studied the question of distribution and inequitable rentals. Rentals are out of focus, that is a fact, and the error lies more with the distributor than the theatre owner.

"We should start off on the premise that theatres should pay for a production based upon these facts:

(1) Seating capacity of theatre; (2) Location; (3) Price of admission; (4) Number of performances a day; (5) Length of entire program; (6) Cost of production; and (7) Box-office value of production based upon story, star, the production itself as a whole.

"It is inequitable to base the rental upon the gross receipts because two theatre owners operating under similar circumstances may gross widely different amounts because one may be progressive and properly exploit the attraction, while the other may rest content upon the reputation of his theatre, and, depending upon that, exert less endeavor in exploitation and hence receive a less gross amount in admissions.

"Motion pictures cannot be classed in any different category than that of any form of merchandise in public use.

"It there were a concerted effort on the part of the producers or distributors to maintain a standard of price, instead of underselling one another or linking up inferior productions with those of superior merit, we might secure a more uniform method of distribution and compensation.

"In a situation where an exhibitor controls his community, he ought to be penalized rather than receive a concession in price. By this, I mean an exhibitor who controls his community can be taught to play meritorious productions and pay their true value. Where there is competition in the town, a concession necessarily should be made in order to overcome serious opposition.

"However, there is yet another and more consistent method of rental charge that should be pursued, and would be pursued if the manufacturer did not proceed upon the theory that a meritorious production should be made to pay for a poor production. The motion picture industry is the only industry where a manufacturer expects his customer to pay for defective merchandise through the round-about method of an overcharge on meritorious merchandise. It seems to me to be an unbusinesslike method to compel an exhibitor to pay a percentage of his gross receipts for the feature production.

"We are not prepared to say what percentage of his admissions are to be credited to the feature, what percentage to the short-length subjects, or what percentage to any added attractions by way of music or novelty investiture, and this we can never gauge. So, too, it is error to establish a national quota and apportion a price to every theatre in the country based upon knowledge of what each theatre did with subjects of similar value in the past. To my mind, there is at present but one logical method of determining the gross receipts to a distributor of each production and that is, to take the entire cost, add to it a proportion of overhead, then place upon it an exhibition value, based entirely upon the merits of the production itself, plus its exploitation value, then to apportion the rental according to territorial divisions, which should consist first of a division of states, then counties, then cities, then wards or districts in cities, and stick to the price. If any particular locality does not play a particular production because of the price set upon it, the distributor can easily ascertain the reason why, whether because the price is inequitable, or because of the arbitrary refusal of a theatre owner to play; if the former is the reason, then a business adjustment can be made; if the latter is the reason, then the producer or distributor should not stultify himself by a reduction. Exhibitors will then soon learn of the fair-mindedness of the distributor, and since mankind is generally inclined to be fair itself, time will bring the offending exhibitor to his senses.

"The question of the capital invested in theatres can not enter into consideration when determining a rental price, any more than capital invested in any retail merchandise establishment would determine the price the retailer pays for his merchandise. The return on productions can only be based upon cost and saleable value and no other thought can enter into regulation of the price. The producer should not be permitted to capitalize an exhibitor's ingenuity or progressiveness in running his house or exploiting his program, nor should he be penalized because of anything under the control of the exhibitor, whether it be monopoly in his community, or lack of progressiveness in the operation of his theatre or extravagant investment in his establishment or in its operation.

"In conclusion, permit me to say that it is unfair to compel the exhibitor altogether to 'paddle his own canoe' when we ask him to pay for a production of our own make, and cater to the whims of the public. We must assist him in exploiting his productions, only to prove to him the truth of our statements as to the box-office value of any attraction."

A New York Headquarters for Regional Journals

The 12 regional publications throughout the country have established Eastern headquarters in New York City, and Thomas Jacob Hamlin, president of Associated Film Press, is supervising the office.

There are seven weeklies and five semi-monthlies, in the organization, each covering their respective territories, and Mr. Hamlin says that most of them were established as early as six years ago.

Pennsylvania Censor Issues Drastic Ruling

Ban Films "Glorifying" Criminals; Serials to Be Passed Only in Their Entirety

NOTWITHSTANDING the fact that his recent appointment as a member of the Pennsylvania state board of censors has been the subject of almost continuous criticism by prominent churchmen and women's reform organizations, Henry Starr Richardson, of Philadelphia, secretary of the board, today took the most drastic step in the history of Pennsylvania censorship, when he sent a letter to practically all the film-producing interests which serves notice that a ban will be placed in Pennsylvania on motion pictures in which criminals are "glorified."

In the same letter Secretary Richardson served notice also that in passing on serial films in the future the board will not release single installments until the entire series has been reviewed by the censors.

Richardson's appointment to the board was made by Governor Sproul in October when Dr. Ellis P. Oberholtzer, also of Philadelphia, was removed from a voting membership in the board to a newly created position as director, without the power to censor but at an increased salary. Dr. Oberholtzer, whose removal, it was claimed, had been brought about by the influence of William A. Brady and other prominent producers, had always been regarded by prominent women's clubs and other reform elements in Pennsylvania as the most rigid censor,—a view that was shared by all the picture interests who contended that many of his eliminations from films were uncalled for and unjustified.

When Richardson, who is a Philadelphia politician, and whose appointment is looked upon generally throughout the state as having been the result of political influence, was named to the board of censors there was a mighty howl raised by the reform element which favors the strictest censorship obtainable. They declared that the removal of Oberholtzer and the appointment of Richardson would mean the "letting down" of the censorship bars to an extent which would flood the state with undesirable pictures.

The Rev. Dr. Carl E. Grammer, an Episcopal minister of Philadelphia, went so far as to claim that Richardson's appointment was influenced by campaign contributions made by the motion picture interests to the Republican party in Pennsylvania,—a statement which, it will be recalled, brought forth a stinging denial and rebuke to the minister from Governor Sproul.

Ever since then the Governor has been deluged with protests from church and reform organizations against the removal of Oberholtzer and the appointment of Richardson, but there seems little in today's letter from Richardson to the producers to indicate that he has any intention of casting his influence on the side of lax censorship. Here is what Richardson wrote:

"The Pennsylvania State Board of Censors desires to communicate to all manufacturers of moving pictures the fact that it seriously objects to films in which criminals are shown as heroes of education and refinement who live in luxury and persistently defy and outwit the authorities by their superior wit, resources and audacity, even though in the end they are caught, and, especially, where they are shown in the end to make merely perfunctory professions of reform while reaping rich harvests and attaining great rewards in spite of their criminality. All that glorifies crime, or makes a criminal career or adventure fascinating or alluring is considered by the board to be highly undesirable."

The notice in regard to serials says the board "will consider serial films only in their entirety. In the future single installments will not be considered or passed and the whole film must be submitted before application will be reviewed."

Connecticut Exhibitors Meet in New Haven

Sam Bullock Explains System of Screen Advertising to Benefit State Bodies

MEETING of the Connecticut State division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was held at the Taft Hotel, New Haven, on Tuesday, November 30, with a goodly attendance of exhibitors from all over the state. The object of the meeting was to prepare for active cooperation with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America this winter to combat the many evils confronting the industry.

President Heanue, in opening, announced that an invitation had been extended to Secretary Sam Bullock, of the Northern Ohio Exhibitors' Association, to attend and explain the system of financing that state association by the showing of an official educational reel de luxe, as practiced in Ohio and other states.

Upon being introduced, Mr. Bullock said he would take this opportunity to answer the editorial of the Moving Picture World as published in a recent issue under the caption, "Prostitution of the Screen." He then briefly outlined the history of the movement to stop screen "prostitution," beginning with the inception of the plan four years ago. Mr. Bullock said: "From that time on manufacturers and producers continued to go into the 'insert' game big and kept it up until ten or a dozen states associations started a plan a year ago to render the inserts valueless to the advertisers, and today the evil is seventy per cent less than it was a year ago, and the World is just four years behind in demanding that this 'pernicious' thing be referred to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and others, when the truth of the situation is that thirty-five state exhibitor organizations have solved the problem for themselves by condemning all ad 'inserts' in features and comedies and cutting them out wherever found."

He explained that exhibitor state organizations are busily engaged in cleaning the screens while supporting a movement to finance each state association by the showing of a limited number of made-to-order de luxe industrial educationals, possessing such high entertainment values that they are a welcome feature in the highest class theatres. He explained that all revenues from this source go directly to the state organization and that the matter has absolutely no connection with the national body, the state having sole control at all times.

Following his remarks, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut endorsed the plan outlined by Mr. Bullock and authorized solicitors to secure contracts for bookings of the state official reel for the purposes mentioned, and the officers pledged their cooperation with the New Haven Independent Federated Exchange in the booking and distribution of the reel in the state.

Following the routine business, a committee was appointed consisting of Messrs. H. True, of Hartford, and J. Dawe, of Bridgeport, to consult with the Film Club with a view to having equal representation on a joint state grievance committee.

It was also decided that monthly meetings be held in each Congressional district, to be called by the District Executive member. The state was reported as organized fully 95 per cent and the indications are that all will be in by January 1.

"The motion picture industry never was in stronger condition that it is right now," said Sidney R. Kent, general sales manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, this week. "Not only is there no general depression at the present time, but there is none in sight."

"In July of this year," said Mr. Kent, "we began to hear rumors of depression among the motion picture theatres of the country, which rumors have continued to a point where many people have taken it for granted that a great depression really exists the country over.

"Nothing could be farther from the truth. There have been some 'bad spots,' it is true, but these are segregated instances for which local conditions have been responsible. The general situation has been good, and I submit as eloquent evidence of theatre prosperity as a whole the figures listed below, which are the actual amounts paid in to the Government by the combined theatres of the country for the months of July, August and September, 1919, and for the corresponding months in 1920:

July	$4,699,239.22	$6,436,417.41
August	4,692,681.98	6,824,328.56
September	5,463,592.25	7,369,476.75
Total	$14,855,513.45	$20,657,222.70

"The above figures tell the story. They are from the Treasury Department. They are official. They do not lie.

"The Government figures for October of this year are not yet available, but they need not be feared. Judging from our own records of sales, I am certain that they will be found proportionately satisfactory. They will prove that the depression talk in October was just as misleading and, as affecting the general situation, just as erroneous as that of July, August and September is proved to have been."

New Jersey Exhibitors in Convention at Newark

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey convened at the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark, N. J., at 11 o'clock on Thursday, December 9th, with a large number of exhibitors of the state in attendance. John T. Collins, president of the organization, presided. Representatives of the national exhibitor organization were also present in the persons of President Sydney S. Cohen, Joseph Stern, Charles L. O'Reilly and S. I. Berman.

The subjects which occupied a paramount place in the discussion of the members present were the attempt to increase the 5 per cent film tax, counter-action against the proposed crusade to legislate "blue laws" against Sunday openings and national and state censorship. Mr. Collins emphasized the need of a vigorous defense against the forces that are behind the "blue law" and censorship movements and issued a strong call for concerted and single-minded action in tackling the problems that concern the exhibitors' welfare in New Jersey.

M.P.T. Association Starts Anti-Blue Law Fight

A special meeting of the Motion Picture Theatrical Association of the World was held at M. P. T. headquarters, 32 West 47th Street, recently to discuss the movement now being launched by a certain group to prohibit the showing of all motion pictures on Sunday and at the close of the meeting passed unanimously a resolution declaring that the association was against the showing of unwholesome pictures on any day of the week, but that it believed that the prohibiting of Sunday shows would be un-American and a great injustice to the people.

It was also resolved that the association, through its members prominent in all branches of the industry and through its large army of field workers, ascertain definitely the wishes of the majority of the public in this important matter.

Hodkinson's Home-Office Staff at Luncheon

In celebration of the successful culmination of the Hodkinson anniversary celebration, the company gave a luncheon on Saturday, December 4th, at Delmonico's, for members of the home office and of the New York exchange. Fifty-four people sat down to luncheon. Compared, as Mr. Hodkinson said, with the handful of employees that went to make up the organization at its inception three years ago, it gave an interesting illustration of the progress of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

P. N. Brinch, the recently appointed sales manager of the organization, acted as toast-master. W. Steven Bush and James Cowden Meyers made brief speeches, and Mr. Hodkinson closed the luncheon session with a few words apropos the pleasant little affair.

Committee to Drive for Open Sunday in Albany

The first real move towards what it is hoped will result in Sunday motion pictures for Albany, N. Y., was made last Sunday morning, when about 25 men representing the local theatres, as well as all the exchanges, met at the local Paramount office, and after considerable discussion, appointed a committee consisting of W. P. Brooker, manager of the Mark-Strand house; George Roberts, manager of the Hudson theatre; Walter Powers, of the Colonial; Joseph Seidlemen, of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange, and B. M. Moran, of the Pathe exchange, to outline and carry on the preliminary work. The committee will hold a meeting in the near future for the purpose of going over the details of the campaign.

25 Year First Nat'l Franchise for Papayanakos

One of the biggest motion picture deals ever consummated in Northern New York became a reality last week, when James Papayanakos, owner and manager of the Olympic theatre at Watertown, N. Y., received a twenty-five year franchise with the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., giving him the exclusive rights locally to all releases by this company. It is claimed that this is part of a movement which has been under way for some time.

C. B. Price Executive Has Resigned from Company

C. A. Meade, for a long time past secretary and director of C. B. Price Co., Inc., has resigned from that corporation. Mr. Meade announces that his future connections in the industry will be ready for publication at an early date.

Elmer Pearson Tours Central West States

Expects an Early Return to Normal in Places Upset by Economic Readjustment

CONDITIONS in the Central West are described in a report just submitted to Paul Brunet, president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., by Elmer R. Pearson, director of Pathe exchanges. Mr. Pearson has just completed a three weeks' tour of the Middle West states, and the report embodies the observations made during the trip of inspection. Mr. Pearson points out that in many places affairs have been upset by the readjustment of economic conditions but an early return to normal conditions is expected in the affected districts. Mr. Pearson's report follows:

"There are so many complexities to the present general conditions that each may have his own particular impression of causes, effects and remedies according to his situation and environment, and the less one knows about other industries and the other fellow's problems, the worse one is likely to believe the conditions.

"One would just naturally think that a big debtor like the Government became during the War would like to pay off with a dollar at least as low in buying power and as accessible as the one it borrowed, and yet the Nation's creditor, as if by common impulse, ordered thumbs down and stubborn deflation started. Retailers for want of credit stopped buying and right now probably have the smallest stocks in the memory of living man; more factories had to close, unemployment reduced the consumer buying power, and now the farmer, that backbone of the entire people's buying power, is granted less credit than at any time since he preempted his land fifty years ago.

"Prices of other commodities through the control of wholesale and retail associations have come down by relatively easy stages by from 25 per cent. to 40 per cent., but corn dropped from $1.75 to 35 cents per bushel; wheat, cattle and hogs in nearly the same ratio.

"How frequently we have been told that investments in the motion-picture business were of the most hazardous, yet we have witnessed a slump in every other line of business for six or eight months, the motion-picture box-office has only been affected during the last few weeks, and less than half of the theatres have felt any slump even for that short period. As certainly as there are no stocks of any manufactured necessities in the country, just that certain must they be manufactured, and we are daily seeing accounts of mills and factories reopening. The farmers will gradually absorb their production losses, and as a whole we will soon find ourselves even more prosperous, the only difference being a slight alteration in the value of our medium of exchange, which can also be turned to the credit account of our industry.

A confidence man has been caught in Dallas, Texas, posing as D. W. Griffith, the motion-picture producer. His real name is said to be John P. Daley. He registered at the Adolphus Hotel one day last week as D. W. Griffith of New York and proceeded to enjoy himself, not at the expense of the real Mr. Griffith of film fame but with cost to several gullible people of Dallas.

A young salesgirl of Dallas became the object of the impostor's ardent attentions. Dinners, purchasing arrangements at the local stores and an unlimited contract as motion-picture star were some of the gifts said to have been lavished upon the young lady. The absurdity of some of his statements, including the offer to finance a new theatre for Dallas, aroused the suspicions of some of the local film men eventually, and his arrest followed. He is being held by the Dallas police at headquarters, pending further investigation.

"The war period saw the considerable deflation of money, to meet which the box-office increased its fee far in excess of the proportion film rentals were increased. Thus if the box-office can still maintain its present fee, it will enjoy an actual substantial increase.

"Everywhere I went I made it my business to talk with all exhibitors and was particularly impressed with the extraordinary fairness manifested especially with the smaller exhibitor toward the producer, the exchange and a comprehensive recognition of their problems. They all seem to know that they had been the chief beneficiary of the wonderful box-office conditions of the past two or three years, and of their items of expense the film rental had actually increased the least of any, consequently they were inclined to a feeling of cooperativeness. Nowhere was there any sign of antagonism.

"Although there were 90,000 unemployed at Detroit, the downtown theatres were habitually packed, and I was assured that no falling off in receipts had been experienced. Some of the other Michigan towns reported a small falling off. Lansing, however, was holding up well.

"Chicago had noticed no falling off at the large theatres. Small towns and suburban houses seemed to be off only slightly. The same condition prevailed at Des Moines, Minneapolis and Omaha. The Liberty theatre at Kansas City was holding people out, and said it was not unusual, only a few of the small towns and small theatres reported any falling off at all, and those only slight.

"In St. Louis the large theatres were all doing a big business. They claimed that St. Louis had 42,000 unemployed and that it was hurting business at their smaller theatres.

"I am happy to add that exhibitors are more and more coming to look upon the Pathe Exchange, Inc., as the one dependable independent exchange where ample service can always be had to fill, if need be, their entire weekly requirements, and am sure we enjoy very much patronage because of the fact that aside from our satisfactory service exhibitors wish us well and express it in that manner."

Sun-Light Arc to Rescue in Building Collapse

On Wednesday, December 1st, at 5 o'clock, Mr. H. S. Fuld, a motion picture man, rushed into the Sun-Light Arc Corporation's office at 218 West 48th Street, New York, and related to C. G. Nesbitt, Eastern sales manager, that a large building had collapsed at 52nd Street and Broadway, that it was believed many people were buried underneath the fallen walls and other debris, and that the fire and police departments were on the job but seriously hampered due to lack of light.

The result was that within an hour from the time the accident was reported the Sun-Light arc motor generating set and two Sun-Light arc lamps were on the job; cable was laid and the lamps turned on; and 200,000 candle power of pure sunlight flooded the scene of action. One Sun-Light arc was mounted on a truck at 52nd Street and Broadway, and the spread of the beam from that lamp covered not only the remaining walls on the Broadway side, but illuminated the adjacent buildings towards 53rd Street as well. The second Sun-Light arc was stationed near 52nd Street and Seventh Avenue, and the spread of its beam covered the 52nd Street side of the building and penetrated the inside of the building back of the wall remaining on the Broadway side, thus showing up each brick and timber that remained.

City officials of the fire and police departments, who were on the scene, were profuse in their praise of the prompt and effective aid rendered by the Sun-Light arc equipment.

The Motion Picture as a Welder of Nations

That the future of nations would be linked together in the future through the medium of the motion picture is the belief of Lord Northcliffe, prominent British publisher, according to J. Stuart Blackton, who recently returned from England.

Mr. Blackton himself supports Lord Northcliffe's views. "Who knows," stated the producer to British newspaper men before sailing for America, "but that the film may prove as efficacious as the League of Nations in promoting international understanding and good will? Certainly the future history of the world will be visualized on the screen."

"Bring Back the Five-Reeler!"

It is a strong appeal for the return of the five-reel picture and the abandoning of the seven-reel drama that comes from Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Palace theatre, of Hamilton, Ohio, a "small town" exhibitor. His letter follows that of Geo. W. Trendel, of the Kunsky Enterprises of Detroit, which was published in last week's Motion Picture News. The producers, Mr. Trendel believed, produced longer features for the smaller exhibitors, from whom they can get larger prices for them. But Mr. Meyer insists that a five-reeler is essential to the "eighty percenter" on account of his limited seating capacity. Read what he says. You will find it interesting.

I am the minority. I represent what is so commonly known as the back-bone of the Motion Picture Industry. I am cussed at at times; laughed at at other times; but never taken real seriously. I am the small-town exhibitor.

The pointed question I beg leave to put to you is this: "Won't you please, for my sake and for the sake of thousands of other small-town exhibitors, return to five-reel features?" While I speak for myself only, I dare say that I voice the sentiments of thousands of others. Perhaps you are not aware of the fact that the seating capacity of the small-town theatres is limited—too limited as a general rule. Our theatre represents an investment of $150,000 and the best the Ohio State law would permit us was to get in a trifle over 800 seats. I know from past experience that the majority of small towns—by small towns I mean anything under 50,000—are Saturday and Sunday towns. In other words, we must rely on Saturdays and Sundays for our business or lose out.

Now here's what we're up against. A five-reel feature today is almost as much a curiosity as a coin dated 1812. One-reel comedies—that is, good ones—are few and far between. So here's what we're up against: A limited seating capacity; compelled to put on programs of nine and ten reels as a general rule. Oh, yes, ocacsionally we get by with eight, but that's much minority.

Now here's what you're forcing me to do. If you don't come back to the good old five-reel features, you're going to make a speed merchant out of me like the fellow at St. Louis who ran "If I Were King" and a two-reel Lloyd in one hour and forty-eight minutes—fully 10,000 feet! I don't want to be a speed king. And what's more, my patrons wouldn't stand for it if I felt that way inclined.

I've had this topic in mind for a long time, but here's what prompts it: Yesterday I showed "A Broadway Cowboy," five reels, and Harold Lloyd in "Get Out and Get Under," two reels, to over four thousand paid admissions in one day. We opened at one o'clock and closed at eleven. In other words, what may well stand as a phenomenal record, we occupied every seat five times. I don't expect to play to that many people every week. I question whether I'll ever do it again.

I know that this record yesterday is nothing short of phenomenal, BUT, please, Mr. Producer, for towns such as ours that are dead five days a week and depend solely on the Saturday and Sunday trade, come back to five reels. In the first place, I've seen very, very few features that couldn't be told intelligently and forcibly in 5,000 feet. And looking at it from your point of view, look at the raw film that you can save. You know just as well as I do that we're not buying number of reels any more. In other words, you're going to get just as much—or more—for a five-reeler than you would for a six, or seven, or eight.

Yesterday's business has taught me two things. To consider footage first, and subject second, for any holiday attractions.

And while I'm at it, permit me to add a suggestion that is strictly local, to be sure. In this town of forty odd thousand, a strictly industrial community, our patrons want light stuff. A "Broadway Cowboy" and Harold Lloyd combination was just exactly what they want. No, I don't suppose they'd stand for it every day i nthe week, but the proof of the pudding is in the eating. We played to as many people in one day yesterday as "The Love Flower" did in four;—and "The Love Flower" had a Sunday opening.

So bear in mind that a great many of the present generation have forgotten that Mr. Griffith made "The Birth of a Nation." I dare say a lot of them didn't even know it. But that's getting off the subject. For your sake and especially for min, please, pretty please, come back to the good old days of five reels.

The Mainspring of the Works

ABOVE is the first photograph to be published in America of Sir Oswald Stoll, head of the international motion picture enterprises which bear his name. His personality has unusual interest now because of the establishment of the Stoll Film Corporation of America and its plans to release one feature a week beginning with the New Year.

Committee Discloses Wild-Cat Enterprises

WORTHLESS stock amounting to more than a quarter of a billion dollars is the annual offering of the wild-cat motion picture companies of the country to the American public, according to an estimate of the vigilance committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry after completing a preliminary survey of three and a half months.

The committee has investigated some seventy companies with a total capitalization of about $180,000,000. It believes that when all the new companies of this character, launched during the past year, are counted, it will be found that their total capitalization will reach fully $250,000,000.

The committee declares that the people of this country have actually bought during the past year between $25,000,000 and $50,000,000 of stock issues, none of which are worth the paper on which the certificates are printed.

It should be borne in mind that these figures do not refer to stock issues offered for business expansion by well established companies with big assets and big earning power.

Most of the money invested in wild-cat companies has come out of the pockets of small tradesmen, clerks, stenographers, waitresses, bootblacks and other wage-earners struggling with the high living cost problems, declare members of the committee. Government employees in Washington are said to have bought considerable stock in one company floated in that city.

The vigilance committee was created last summer by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The committee is composed of James R. Quirk, editor of Photoplay Magazine, chairman; Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; Paul Gulick, of the University Film Manufacturing Company; Nathan Vidaver, counsel for the committee; Martin J. Quigley, of the Exhibitors' Herald; Lesley Mason, of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, and Fred J. Beecroft, of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Only two or three of the seventy companies investigated had any assets or proven earning capacity when their stock was offered to the public, according to the committee's report. Only about a half dozen could boast officers or promoters who had any real experience in any branch of the motion picture industry, it is declared.

The committee's investigation disclosed some interesting methods of finance, and some pitiable stories of individuals who had put their trust in the tales told by promoters of motion picture companies. One young woman wrote the committee that she had invested $3,000, her whole fortune, in a company promoted by a former instructor in a dancing school. This young woman, the sole support of an aged mother and an invalid aunt, believed the glowing tales of vast returns to be made by the investment of comparatively small sums in a film producing company. The dancing master induced a half dozen of his former pupils to invest $250 apiece in his company, promising to make them film stars. He made similar promises to several waitresses and chambermaids employed in a big New York hotel, selling each of these women stock to the amount of from $250 to $300. Finally one of his women victims complained to the district attorney, and the promoter was arrested charged with grand larceny. The treasurer of his company is a fugitive from justice

A motion picture company, now struggling with the production of a film play near New York City, spurred up its stock sale in a similar manner, declares the committee's report. When wage-earners approached by stock salesmen hesitated to invest, the latter promised the prospective stock-buyers engagements at good wages in the production of the company's play. Thus scores of movie contracts were issued to stock-buyers. When the company began filming, the prospective motion picture stars began flocking to the studio where they presented their contracts for movie engagements. When they arrived at the studio, their attention was called to an inconspicuous clause in their contracts stating that it had to be countersigned by the casting director. The latter was compelled to play into the hands of his unscrupulous employer inasmuch as the applicants were wholly unfit to take any part whatever in motion picture production.

The committee is able to state definitely that these wildcat companies have sold millions of dollars' worth of stock through the mails. Whether the companies in question are guilty of technical violation of the laws regulating the use of the mails rests with the Post Office authorities, to whom the committee is ready to turn over all its files.

Famous Players' India Plant Opens Shortly

WITHIN the next month actual production work will be started in the new Bombay producing center established by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The plant is located two miles from the city limits of Bombay in an historic old Indian mansion, known as the Lowji Castle—the name by which the studio will be officially designated. In view of the fact that scarcely four months have elapsed since the first Famous Players' representative landed in India and opened negotiations for a studio site, the inauguration of production activities within the next month at this place, said to have been converted meanwhile into thoroughly modern and well equipped filming center, is a remarkable achievement in the opinion of Famous Players-Lasky officials.

In the middle of June last, Famous Players' representatives, Tarkington Baker and Frank Meyer, arrived in Bombay. Meyer remained two months; Baker continues in India, now occupying the position of managing director of the Indian company, a Famous Players' subsidiary with a capital of $5,000,000.

Though barely four months have passed since he landed with Meyer in Bombay, in that brief period Mr. Baker superintended the selection of a studio site, after a long and thorough tour of the leading cities of India, remodelled the buildings found on the site and erected such new structures as requirements dictated and has built up a selected and trained studio staff of native Hindu workmen.

The studio, in the middle of October—four months after Mr. Baker landed in India—was ready for occupancy. Not a single detail had been overlooked. Lowji Castle, the main building standing on the site selected, has been converted into a comfortable, convenient, modern and efficient producing plant.

In addition, Mr. Baker had laid the foundations for an extensive distributing system throughout the Orient, it is declared, and has established exchanges in the leading cities of India, Burma, Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, Java, Mesopotamia and adjacent countries.

The mansion is surrounded by a huge compound. Here, in the enclosure circumscribed by the tall stone walls, production of every description and of every sort can go forward without delay. Half a dozen big units can operate in the studio and on the studio grounds at one time, it is stated.

"Few people realize," said Mr. Baker recently to a Bombay newspaper interviewer, "how many and how promising and how various are the possibilities of picture-making in India."

"India is a land of contrasts," continued Mr. Baker. "There is everything in the world here for the making of interesting pictures. Within forty hours of Bombay, by rail, there are such strange places as Thibet and Afghanistan. To the south lies Ceylon. To the north are the lofty peaks of the magnificent Himalayas, the tallest, most impressive, most wonderful mountains in the world. On their southern slopes lies Kashmir, where snows fall as deep as those in Canada. Yet a day's journey away is Bengal, sweltering in perpetual heat, beneath a tropic sun.

"There are broad plains and wide deserts. The cactus is only half an hour's

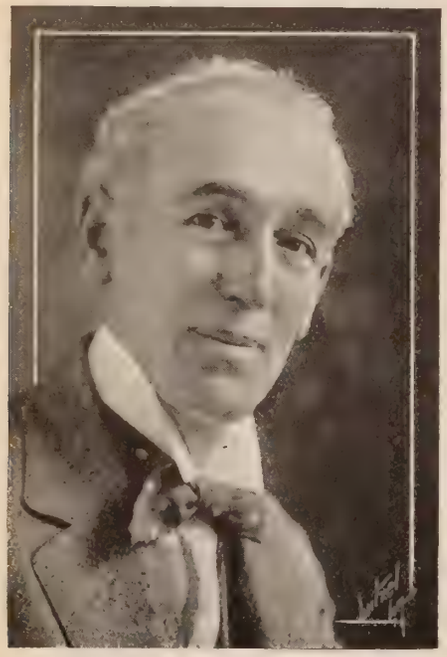
Sam Spedon, Veteran Publicist, Dead



THE regrets of executives and exhibitors, big and little alike throughout the length and breadth of filmdom, as well as a deep feeling of loss by his fellow craftsmen, follow the sudden death of Sam Spedon of Moving Picture World, at Atlanta, Ga., December 8.

In his career as publicist, executive and latterly special writer for the World, Mr. Spedon ran the gamut of the motion picture industry from its earliest days. Rightfully he laid claim to be the first press agent of the business. In Vitagraph's early days he instituted the first press department, working alone, and remained for years with that concern building up the nucleus of the first of the large, specialized publicity institutions now boasted of by every large concern.

For the past five years Mr. Spedon has been on the staff of Moving Picture World. During that period he has attended and reported every gathering of exhibitors held throughout the country. He probably had as wide a circle of acquaintances as any person in the industry.

His death in Atlanta occurred at 3 A. M., December 8. The cause described in the brief report received, was heart failure.

Tom Moore on Defensive Against Reformers

The prompt action of Tom Moore, the prominent Washington, D. C., exhibitor, in replying to the announcement of a "blue law" Sunday crusade to close picture theatres on Sunday in the national capital and later throughout the United States, and his immediate preparations to undertake a referendum, consisting of sworn statements, destined to show how the people themselves stood on the matter —is looked upon as being the first effective resistance to the proposals of "blue law" advocates to curtail all forms of amusement on Sunday.

Seldom, if ever, in the film annals of the Southeast was so much interest and enthusiasm expressed as in the Southeastern Motion Picture Exposition, which was held at the Auditorium, Atlanta, Ga., the week of December 6th to 11th.

Plans were first discussed for this Exposition in May and the Film Exchange Managers' Association scheduled it for late Fall, the week of December 6th to 11th finally being chosen for many reasons. The North Carolina State Exhibitors' League changed the date of its annual mid-Winter Convention and immediately following it, embarked on a private train, to bring them to Atlanta. The same plan was followed by the Alabama, South Carolina, Florida and Georgia Leagues.

That the editors of the three local papers considered it a big thing is demonstrated by the unprecedented space they gave the affair. Daily stories and larger ones on Sundays led up to a full page spread in each of the local papers, on the stars who attended—namely, Eugene O'Brien, Zena Keefe, Martha Mansfield, Lillian Walker, Frances Eldridge, Helen Gardner, Louise DuPre, Muriel Ostriche.

A.M.P.A. Told of Publicity Work in England

Fresh from his return from Great Britain, where, as the managing director of the Famous Players, Ltd., he has been supervising the activities of the production, distribution and sales of that company's product throughout the United Kingdom, Mr. John C. Graham, the guest of honor at the regular Thursday luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, spoke interestingly of the relationship between the American publicist and his contemporary in Great Britain.

Contrasting the chief difference between the work of publicity men in this country and in the United Kingdom, Mr. Graham explained that America offered a wider field for the press agent's manifold activities. On the other hand he pointed out that the total number of theatres in Great Britain was in the neighborhood of 3,000 as compared with the estimated 18,000 theatres in this country. This feature, he emphasized, gave the American publicity man ample scope to accomplish things which were restricted to the British publicist in view of the limited number of theatres in that country.

journey from the jungle. Tigers and wild elephants roam the plains and jungles and foothills. Cotton fields are only a day's run from a land that grows only the crops of New York state. Alligators or crocodiles, if venturesome enough, can swim up rivers from their abiding places to the frigid waters of melting glaciers.

"And the people of India differ as widely as the various sections of India differ geographically, historically and in all other aspects differ from each other. Here are Mohammedans and Hindus—as wide apart in a religious sense as the two poles. The Sikh differs from the Punjabi, the Punjabi from the Rajputani, the Rajputani from the Bengal, and the Bengal from the Madrasee.

New York State's Attitude on School Films

Alfred W. Abrams, chief of the department of visual instruction of the New York State department of education, is watching with interest the work which is being done these days in the way of instructing by the use of films in some of the New York city schools. While Mr. Abrams is not in favor of the adoption of motion pictures in the schools of New York state, as a method of instruction, he nevertheless stated today that he was open to conviction along these lines. With the resignation of Dr. John H. Finley as the head of the state education department, it is barely possible that his successor, not yet appointed, may be favorable to film instruction.

With the head of the examination division of the state, Mr. Abrams spent an hour or so last week at one of the local exchanges, viewing several films which have been devised for use in classes of physics. These films, according to Mr. Abrams, did not impress him as being particularly well adopted to this course of study. In addition the cost of films to the various schools must be also reckoned with, Mr. Abrams figuring out that it would cost from $100 to $125 per school and there are 800 of them in this state, for the use of such a film for a year, and this for the instruction of one class only, in the case of physics averaging from eight to fifteen persons.

At the present time, according to information which has come to the New York state department of education, the city of Newark, N. J., is specializing to a greater extent in the use of film for instruction purposes than any city in the United States.

Canadian Club Dinner Guests See "Foreigner"

On Friday, December 2, at the Hotel Biltmore, assembled members of the Canadian Club of New York, and their guests, including many connecting factors of the world of motion picture entertainment. Officials of Associated First National Exhibitors were among the favored number, as well as representatives of the trade press and others interested in the motion picture industry.

Following dinner, the first presentation of "The Foreigner" was flashed upon a screen made ready for the occasion. This being the first of a series of stories by Ralph Connor, the Canadian author, to be filmed was the obvious reason for its selection by the committee. With the announcement of the picture a telegram from the author was read expressing his appreciation of the homage paid him in the selection of his first book to be used for a film play being the choice of the Canadian Club.

While the final trimmings were not yet complete, a scratch print being shown, which was hurried through in order to make ready for showing at all, the picture was well and appreciatively received.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Behold My Wife—

Fine. Held up strong for three consecutive weeks. Theme appeals to majority of movie fans. Fine sets are also an attraction. (Middle West.)

Held here another week. A good picture and well liked. (East.)

This is the best picture I've seen in ages. Went over to packed houses, in a week of only two clear days. No matter how hard it rained, they came just the same! Great! (South.)

Certainly a fine production and a sure-fire box office attraction. Had fine business. (West.)

An Old-Fashioned Boy—

A good show. Comfortable entertainment. Played to steady business all week. (Middle West.)

One of the poorest things Ray has ever done. They come because it was Ray—but they didn't enjoy it.

The White Circle—

The atmosphere of Stevenson is splendidly maintained and this picture went over in great shape. Box office excellent. (South.)

Conrad in Quest of His Youth—

Drew about average crowds during the entire week. People characterized it as "very good." (East.)

Her Husband's Friend—

Fair attraction with business about as usual. (West.)

The Testing Block—

Wonderful picture which sure did make the money pour in. The audiences were delighted with it, and said it was great. (West.)

A delicate subject, frankly but delicately handled in the most artistic drama ever given the screen. A characterization no other woman but Louise Glaum could possibly portray.

Third of a page in Sunday's papers for "Love" by the Strand theatre of Cleveland, O.

Something to Think About—

Good houses for fifth week, which speaks for itself. A good attraction for the box office. (West.)

To Please One Woman—

Just an average picture and it played to fair business. (Middle West.)

Idols of Clay—

Held over for second week but business did not hold up. (Middle West.)

Cradle of Courage—

Fair. Not a knock-out. The public who like Hart insist upon his playing "Westerns." This was a somewhat illogical thing, but I cleared a little more than expenses on it. (South.)

Heliotrope—

Fairly entertaining picture given a good production and attracting good business for week run. (East.)

Good picture well worth seeing, which was attested by my houses which were pretty well crowded. (West.)

Always Audacious—

A splendid picture play which brought capacity business. Reid at his best in dual role. This star is becoming a favorite at this theatre. (East.)

Burglar Proof—

Mediocre picture. Business fair. (East.)

The Restless Sex—

A fair picture and box office attraction, which keeps up the suspense well. Contains some rather lavish spectacles of studio life. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Dangerous Business—

Constance Talmadge has become a real contender with her sister Norma for big receipts. The picture pleased. (Middle West.)

Star is a big favorite at this theatre. Picture gave entire satisfaction. (East.)

Excellent attraction which went over big. Star at her best. Pleased immensely. (Middle West.)

Harriet and the Piper—

They liked it—but did not do capacity business. Just fair. Wherever Miss Stewart is popular it should be a knockout. (South.)

A rather poorly motivated play based on an old theme. Anita Stewart's charm and ability help to make it an average drawing card. (Middle West.)

The Devil's Garden—

It's too heavy for the average audience. And it's too gloomy. For those who go to the theatre to see fine acting, this will be a splendid attraction, but not for the vast majority who go only to be amused. (Middle West.)

Twin Beds—

One of the best comedies I have played in a long time. Went over great. Box office receipts entirely satisfactory for week's run. (South.)

The Branded Woman—

The Talmadge fans turned out strong here to see this picture which brought out the S. R. O. sign at most performances. It was a splendid exposition of the theory that most of Norma's admirers go to see her instead of her pictures, because the photoplay in the opinion of most was the poorest thing Norma has ever played in.

The Yellow Typhoon—

Diverting story well acted. Full of action. Anita Stewart, however, should never appear in the role of the villain and with a blonde wig. Fair business at box office. (East.)

Curtain—

Very entertaining picture which went over big. Well liked by the audiences. (West.)

Fair picture. Usual box office receipts. (West.)

REALART

The Furnace—

Unusually good audience picture. Everybody liked it. Opened to big Sunday business. (Middle West.)

Very big production. Business better than average. (Middle West.)

Sweet Lavender—

One of the greatest surprises of the season. Considered the poorest picture this star has ever played in—yet it did capacity business. (South.)

Food for Scandal—

Very well liked. Brought large box office receipts. (West.)

The Law of the Yukon—

Poor picture but went over big. (West.)

The Soul of Youth—

Very well liked. Brought packed houses. (West.)

Oh, Lady, Lady—

Fine picture, very entertaining. More than usual business. (West.)

METRO

Billions—

Nazimova shows a decided improvement in this picture over "Madame Peacock." Well taken by big audiences for the entire week. (East.)

Hearts Are Trumps—

There is nothing startling about this production. Ranks about average. (East.)

Clothes—

Very good. The title pulled well and the picture pleased. Played a week to good busines. It would stand some careful editing for it's too long. On the whole, a nice little picture.

Madame Peacock—

Exploitation put this picture over. A poor production. (West.)

Old Lady 31—

This picture was liked by very few. Business about average. (West.)

FOX

Three Gold Coins—

Typically a Tom Mix attraction. Those who like the hero will like the play. (Middle West.)

The Face at Your Window—

Propaganda against Bolshevism that did not please. Receipts not up to usual. (Middle West.)

Drag Harlan—

Farnum always goes over big in a Western picture. (West.)

UNIVERSAL

Once to Every Woman—

Am playing it for a second week in a town where "Humoresque" played only one week. One of the best attractions I have played this season. (East.)

Dorothy Phillips does some of best work of her career in this picture which is interesting and handsomely produced. Did splendid business at this theatre. (Middle West.)

Just completed second and very successful week. I make a practice of one week runs, or even three days, but this picture played to two weeks' capacity business. (East.)

Quarter page for "The Furnace," by the Madison theatre of Detroit

PATHE

The Girl in the Web—

Fair. Don't think Blanche Sweet belongs in these silly namby-pamby roles. She is one of the best emotional actresses on the screen—but wasted in drivel like this. Box office only fair. (South.)

This "The Face at Your Window" display is by the William Fox Washington theatre, Detroit

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

Love—

The title's enough to bring all the women. It's thrilling, and surprising, but never offensive. Good business at two simultaneous first run houses. (Middle West.)

Love Madness—

Fair picture. Average box office receipts. (West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Mark of Zorro—

Big box office attraction on account of star's popularity. Very good picture. (West.)

Great picture. Drew packed houses. Well received and well liked. (West.)

EQUITY

Mid-Channel—

Is finely produced and interesting picture, and coupled with the popularity of Clara Kimball Young at this house, is making a good record. Held over for the fourth week. (Middle West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

So Long Letty—

It made even the most cynical laugh; also made a big week for the box office. (East.)

Quarter page display for "Kismet" used by the Goodwin theatre of Newark, N. J.

This picture brought good returns and seemed to please. (West.)

Not much as a picture and a poor box office attraction. (West.)

The Stealers—

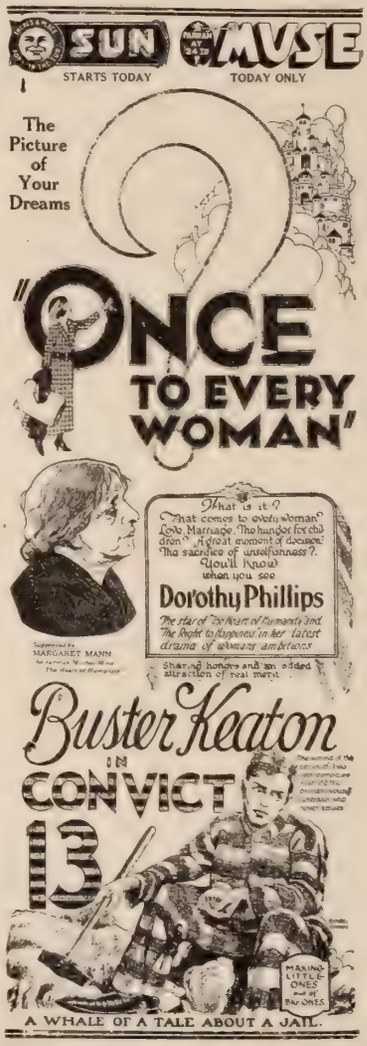
Kismet—

Unable to handle the crowds. Broke house record even at advance prices. (East.)



Full page in depth by three column display for "Once to Every Woman" by the Sun and Muse theatre, Omaha, Neb.

GOLDWYN

The Great Lover—

This picture was a good one and brought more than usual business. (West.)

Honest Hutch—

Rogers great as usual. This picture went over big. Box office receipts large. (West.)

It's a Great Life—

Very good. Seemed to please and brought big business. (West.)

Milestones—

Beautiful picture, well done by capable cast, but too subtle to appeal to the masses. This is a classy play all through, and will not satisfy those who are looking for cheap thrills.

Old Hutch—

Extremely fine picture but star has very little box office value in this city. More of a man's favorite than a woman's. (East.)

Quarter page for "A Romantic Adventuress," by the Missouri theatre of St. Louis

Out of the Storm—

Fairly good picture. Went over well. (East.)

Just Out of College—

Very poor production and box office receipts did not reach average. (West.)

The Branding Iron—

Strong picture with good situation and plenty of suspense. Did better than average business for a week. (Middle West.)

Earthbound—

Gave universal satisfaction. Went over big and brought big returns. (Middle West.)

A wonderful production. The box office results were very large. (West.)

Madame X—

Went very well. Good picture. (East.)

Great picture. Broke box office records. (Middle West.)

GARDEN
Beginning TODAY
Truly, Great Picture
THREE times had fate brought them together--just to meet--gaze deep into each other's eyes--and pass on--
But--tonight surrounded by the lavish gorgeousness of society's wild orgy, he felt—he sensed—he somehow knew she was calling to him--
And finally she came hurtling down through the storm swept clouds--entangled in the wreckage of the stricken plane--down into his arms--
Days--weeks--months of his life's dream came true--Then--her husband came to claim her--

Sink's Journal Cooperation

Pastime Theatre Tie-Up for "What Women Love" Easy of Accomplishment

NEWSPAPER contests are always winners for the motion picture theatre exhibitor, and that the small town man can put them over is shown by Kenneth Sink, of the Pastime theatre, Greenville, Ohio. When he booked "What Women Love" he was anxious to put over the exploitation based on the title by attempting to discover what woman love.

The advertising tie-up with local merchants, that of a combination page or double page, the co-operating merchants featuring something that could be classed under the general title of "Something that Women Love," did not especially appeal to him. The merchants in Greenville who advertise use good space and the effort to interest those who aren't in the habit of advertising seemed hardly worth the effort.

Then he saw the account of the way the title exploitation had been handled in San Jose, California, in MOTION PICTURE NEWS. While the exhibitor there had used the combination advertising, a new angle had been given to it by the merchants offering prizes for the best definition of "What Women Love."

Mr. Sink went to the Greenville Tribune. He pointed out to the editor the interest the contest had aroused in San Jose and offered to put up $15 to be distributed as prizes by the newspaper in a similar contest to be conducted by the newspaper itself. The editor liked the idea. Mr. Sink made no stipulations of any kind on the theory he would profit more by what the newspaper would give willingly than if he attempted to bargain with them for free publicity or a stated number of times that the picture must be mentioned.

The newspaper made the announcement of the prizes on the front page. It was a newspaper contest pure and simple and gave the picture the creamiest sort of boosting by declaring that the productions set forth so clearly the answer to the question of "What Women Love" that the contest would close the day the run of the picture started at the Pastime theatre. For eight days prior to the date set for the opening of the run, the newspaper featured the contest on the front page.

Once a newspaper is interested in a contest the certainty that it will be pushed for all there is in it, can be taken for granted. The newspaper has to get a big response in order to justify its own pulling powers. The Greenville Tribune was no exception and before the picture ever hit Greenville it was the talk of the city.

The House Manager had arranged for three hundred copies of the front page of the Tribune on which the prize winning essay was printed, to be reproduced on cardboard and as soon as they were ready they had been taken to a printer.

The cards were all tacked up during the night.

Ben Ali Theatre, Lexington, Presents Style Show

Elaborate co-operation with the Lexington (Ky.) merchants dealing in apparel served to put over "Clothes," at the Ben Ali theatre, with unusual success.

A style show prologue, arranged by S. B. Sparks, superintendent and exploitation manager for the Phoenix Amusement Company, comprising two first-run theatres in Lexington and houses in Frankfort, Winchester, Paris and Richmond, was the central feature.

Advertising of this began about a week in advance of the event. Space was taken in the newspapers, special announcements were printed on window cards and placards were placed in the hotels.

Besides the exhibition on the stage of the Ben Ali of clothes for men, women and children for morning, afternoon and evening, there was a supplementary display of such articles in the lobby, so that the audience, on strolling out, might again look over the merchandise offered by merchants, members of the clothes show.

The prologue, when presented, was divided into three acts, the first showing street and afternoon dresses and men's business suits; the second displaying sport clothes, and the third evening and other clothes, and furs. Mike's orchestra and the College Quintette provided music during the action. Following this the picture was shown, then the slide: "Upon passing out, give your attention to the lobby booth display of CLOTHES."

Garrick Theatre Uses Lobby Display for "Branded Woman"

A novelty in a lobby display was used by the Garrick theatre in Los Angeles for the exploitation of "The Branded Woman," when the production was brought back to that theatre for a second run.

The Garrick is located on Broadway, the busiest traffic street in Los Angeles and for that reason has always specialized in lobby displays. For the return engagement of the Norma Talmadge production, however, an entirely new effect was used.

The whole top of the lobby, from the roof of the box office to the ceiling, was converted into a stage. The necessary drops and set pieces were installed for the creation of a genuine pastoral scene. In the foreground a cut-out of Miss Talmadge in the arms of her leading man was used as the only figures in the whole scene. Curtains were draped on both sides to add realism to the stage effect.

The whole arrangement was one of the most effective lobby displays ever used by the Garrick, and the management of the theatre gives credit to it for a great part of the magnificent business done by the houses on the two weeks special engagement of the feature.

This is the ancient cab used in the exploitation of "Humoresque" at the Kimmel theatre, Cairo, Ill., as told in the accompanying article

Raymond Makes Capital of Cairo History

Ancient Hack Basis of Unusual Exploitation Story

CAIRO is the name of a small Southern Illinois municipality which rests on the bank of the Mississippi River and whose history is interwoven with numerous and picturesque legends. Cairo is a town that was the center of considerable martial action during the ante-bellum and post-bellum days of 1860. It was there that many of the famous Civil War heroes passed and in this connection there came about a legend that today is often the subject of fireplace gossip.

It dealt with the story of an old shay that was used on an unusual occasion. Although Cairo was in a nominally Northern state, much sympathy of its inhabitants went to the cause of the Confederacy. The sympathy for the South grew so formidable that soon it developed into a recalcitrant hatred for the North. This was even before the actual fighting. In accordance with their sympathies, the cab drivers of Cairo formed an honorable agreement among themselves. Because of the fact that many Northern soldiers were often in Cairo on various missions, it was decided by the four cab drivers, who constituted the entire taxi force of that day, not to carry a Northern military man, regardless of circumstance or occasion. They swore solemn oaths during a specially called meeting and forthwith took themselves away to abide by their vows.

Three months previous to the outbreak of hostilities General Sherman paid a visit to Cairo. It was necessary to take the distinguished military leader about the town and into neighboring communities. A cab must be hired. But abiding by their agreement the cabbies refused the comfort of their vehicles. After considerable persuasion, both mental and financial, one of the four drivers consented to take the Northerner to a neighboring town under the cover of night, provided, however, that the other three would not be made acquainted with his act. According to the legend General Sherman would not ride a horse on certain days due to eccentricity and superstition.

The journey was made.

Two days later the cab and the driver disappeared off the face of the earth. No trace of either the human or the four-wheeled carriage could be discerned. And so grew the legend. It is on the tongues of the children of Cairo as well as on the old tongues of the elders. The mysterious evanescence has been a subject of discussion for more than sixty years.

And here is where the Kimmel theatre cashed in in connection with the "Humoresque" which played for three days beginning November 15.

Charles Raymond, exploitation representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced in the two dailies at Cairo in startling type-faces that the old cab had been found and that it would be paraded over the business section of the city on Sunday, November 14, the day previous to the opening of the feature. The advertisements were repeated on several occasions and soon the interest of the townsfolk was at a hectic stage. Excitement was running feverishly because of the fact that in addition to the announcement that the cab had been recovered no mention was made of the discoverers or the person or persons connected with the recent importance. The daily press printed stories telling how the cabby of the Civil War days had broken his pledge because of the fact that he had been robbed on the night previous to his act, and had conveyed the General in order to reimburse himself for his losses. The story was at great length, all of which brought interest to a higher pitch.

On Sunday at the scheduled hour, amid the blare of two trumpets marshaled for the occasion, the ancient cab appeared on the streets drawn by a pair of decrepit mares and driven by a livery boy. More than 75 per cent of the population turned out to witness the return of the cab, which had been drafted from a near-by village by Raymond.

A canvas sign on the two sides of the vehicle read:

"If you are broke, like me,
Borrow money to see
'HUMORESQUE'
at the Kimmel, Mon., Tues., & Wed.
SPECIAL MUSIC."

To say that admissions were actually refused at the box office because of the inadequacy of the seating capacity to accommodate the resulting throngs is putting it lightly. Outside of the cost of the newspaper space, which is a weekly appropriation the stunt set the Kimmel theatre back the total sum of $10, and sent "Humoresque" over in a bigger way than any picture ever featured in Cairo.

Another "What Women Love" Tie-Up

Another good illustration of what may be accomplished in the way of cooperative advertising comes from Altoona, Pa., where the Strand theatre, managed by Silverman Brothers, with M. H. Russell as publicity director, put over a two-page spread in the Altoona Mirror for "What Women Love" in connection with a number of local merchants.

"What Women Love" was the catch line in all the ads with a banner across the two pages reading "'What Women Love'—Today at the Strand" at both the top and bottom.

The result of the stunt, according to Mr. Russell, was such that the theatre, newspapers and merchants were all immensely pleased and ready to get together again when an appropriate tie-up picture comes along.

Tacoma Ledger Prints Movie Section in Two Colors

Tacoma, Wash., came to life with a whizz bang, as far as the motion picture world is concerned, on October 31, when the Tacoma Sunday Ledger printed its motion picture section with a front page in two colors. The idea was the result of a selling talk by Wayland H. Taylor, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's exploitation representative at the Seattle exchange.

The section marked an innovation in Tacoma and was greeted with so much favorable comment that it promises to become a permanent feature on the paper.

Well's Makes Special Bid for Juvenile Business

One of the small town exhibitors who is going after the children's business with success is O. F. Wells, manager of the Lincoln theatre of Chariton, Iowa.

Mr. Well's recently booked "His Picture in the Papers," and a Chaplin comedy and then had special tickets printed which, when distributed at the school houses as school was out, brought a big crowd of youngsters for a matinee beginning at four thirty.

A special admission price of ten cents, if the child had one of Mr. Well's cards was made for the day. The Lincoln played to a house full of youngsters and as many more were turned away.

Watts Presents Another Fine Prologue

Perhaps the competition is keener in Omaha or the inspiration is of a more sublime order; but the fact remains that some of the best prologues given to the motion picture orbit have emanated from the Nebraska metropolis. A striking example of the artistry with which Omaha managers provide their audiences with the proper atmosphere for a feature production was offered when Manager Watts of the Strand theatre made up his program for "Something to Think About."

The stage was given a rustic setting, the main scene representing a country roadside at noontime in midsummer. The converging of two roads by a tall elm tree marked the gathering place of the singers as they strolled in from the fields at the noon hour. To the left side of the stage was the village smithy from which the prologue took its title. The scene was reproduced to portray the setting of Theodore Roberts' blacksmith shop as it appears in "Something to Think About."

The musical numbers were selected from rural numbers and concluded with a selection of "Love's Old Sweet Song" by the entire company. During the action there was a brief pause, marking the elapse of time from noon till twilight, and as the final chorus closed the stage lights were dimmed to impressionize the fading daylight. With the dying away of the final echoes, the house was plunged into darkness and the screen lowered. Within five seconds the projection machine had flashed the first titles of the feature picture.

Manager Watts was so enthusiastic over his prologue that he decided it was worth advertising, and it occupied a good portion of the space used in the Sunday newspaper space of the Strand theatre. "Special electrical stage setting for 'The Village Smithy.' A Musical Treat with H. S. Disbrow, held over by popular demand," was the way in which this part of the copy read. Prologues have become an important part of the Strand's program.

Schaefer's Teaser Campaign A Success

Novel Exploitation for "The Face at Your Window" Staged at St. Louis

MANAGER WALTER SCHAEFER, of the William Fox Liberty theatre, St. Louis, continues to give the attractions booked at this house unique publicity. For the showing of "The Face at Your Window" Schaefer pulled some stunts that had St. Louis residents sitting up nights to protect house and home.

Here follows the story of Schaefer's success:

Across the bottom of every morning and afternoon paper in St. Louis (there are four of them) appeared one day the imperative statement, "Watch the Face at Your Window." This was several days previous to the presentation of the feature and was intended for teaser purposes. And it teased St. Louisans. The advertisement was repeated three times at intervals of forty-eight hours. Because of the fact that much crime is being experienced in this city at the present time, the admonition to "watch the face at the window," while not being very significant, was to say the least extremely psychological. The effect was that everyone, whether interested in the theatres or not, took the sentence up as a slang expression.

When one was desirous of advising his friend to take heed of any particular matter he would tell him to "watch the face at his window." It is only putting it lightly to say that the sentence gained undisputed supremacy over the popular existing vernacular expression, and all because of its presentation to the public at the most psychological moment.

Just when St. Louis was all wrought up on the subject of watching faces at the windows — and also wondering what the warning meant — Schaefer pulled his second string. Three assistants of Schaefer appeared at the press room of the afternoon dailies at 11 o'clock of the day previous to the first showing of the feature. This was press-time and the three assistants informed the foremen of newspaper press-rooms that they each wanted 10,000 copies of the edition that was just about to be printed. Not only that but they wanted the first 10,000 to come out of the press. Two of the papers objected to the unusual transaction, but a little persuasion soon won them over.

Immediately after obtaining the reward of their missions the assistants hurried the total of 30,000 newspapers to a job printer with whom arrangements had been made to further the publicity gag. In less than an hour and a half several small boys were running frantically over the streets of all sections of St. Louis crying "Extra!" and exhorting the passers-by to buy. An extra in St. Louis always has a large sale because of the fact that this city does not enjoy any unusually sensational newspapers. When an extra edition is published, it usually indicates some great or important news event. So the 30,000 papers found ready receivers who found that they did not have to pay for the paper, but that it was being given away.

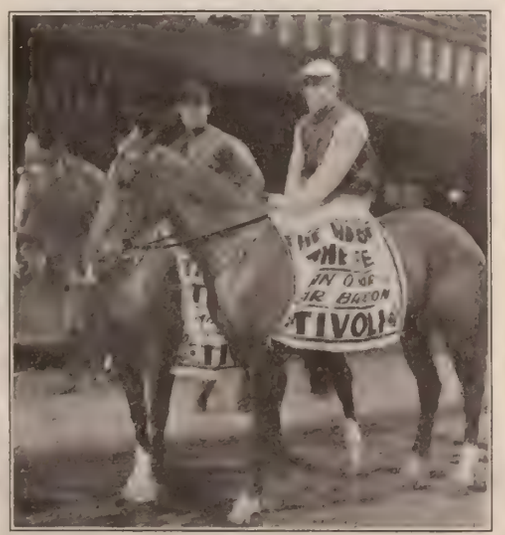
Of course, they read it. Who wouldn't read an extra that was given gratis. And what was the extra about? Well, the headlines printed in red over the black-typed matter of the pages follow:

EXTRA! Sensational feature comes to Liberty! Extra!

See the face at the window all week.

A large supply of the newspapers were driven about the city and distributed from a small cart with two shetland ponies driven by a dwarf who was supplied with a megaphone to shout his EXTRA!

And that is how Schaefer put over another masterpiece of exploitation.



This is the way that Frank J. Costello, manager of the Tivoli theatre of San Francisco, advertised "The Race of the Age." The jockeys rode the streets during the whole week of the picture's engagement

Shop Early Warns Exploitation Cards

"Do Your Christmas Shopping Early" warn placards in stores of Albany, Troy, Schenectady and adjacent territory, which add that it is "Something to Think About."

Exhibitors playing the picture have, in this suggestion, a simple, inexpensive but effective way to exploit it. The idea, originated by Norman L. Dixon, at the Des Moines Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been carried out by Harry Swift.

Robinson's New "Still" Idea

Newark Manager Discovers Another Way to Sell Cooperative Advertising

H. K. ROBINSON, manager of the Terminal theatre, conducted by William Fox, in Newark, N. J., turned to mighty good account an idea he had that "stills" of a photoplay, rightly selected and applied, would form an excellent basis for advertising merchandise. He played Pearl White in "The Thief," the week ending December 4th, and as soon as the booking was definite began putting his idea into practical operation. As the Robinson method may be applied to any city of any size that supports a daily paper or a town where weekly papers furnish the local news, a detailed account of how the Fox manager went about his business will serve to help other live showmen make use of a "hook-up" that has some entirely new angles.

Mr. Robinson first arranged with the advertising department of the Newark Star-Eagle for one-third of a page to be paid for by Fox and applying solely to Pearl White in "The Thief." Then, with the co-operation of the newspaper's solicitors, merchants were visited and "stills" representing Pearl White in scenes from "The Thief" were used as a selling argument for a "hook-up" with eighteen different lines of merchandizing.

The outcome was a three-page showing that immediately preceded the regular amusement portion of the Saturday evening issue of the Star-Eagle, preceding the Sunday opening. In everyone of these advertisements Pearl White was pictured and "The Thief" was referred to in the text advertising the various commodities.

Pearl White was seated on a divan; was at a piano; at the head of a banquet table; leaned over a victrola; reclined in a sun-parlor, and posed, never twice alike in various attitudes—all "stills" from the picture that are available to other showmen who try the idea.

The stills were associated with Star-Eagle patrons who dealt in watches, pianos, paints, furniture, automobiles, weather strips and screens, drugs, jewelry, rugs, corsets, millinery, silverware and gowns; also the Berwick Hotel.

Another Small Town Manager Who Does Things

Manager W. H. Ostenburg, Jr., of the Orpheum theatre, Scottsbluff, Neb., has recently put in some lobby displays that, for a small town, in a two-day house, have excelled those of almost any exhibitor in the country. His most recent display was for "The Revenge of Tarzan," and was so artistic and made the entrance to his theatre look so much like a bit of African jungle that the Scottsbluff newspaper felt called upon to publish a story about it, thus adding further fuel to Mr. Ostenburg's exploitation flame.

The display cost almost nothing, as the palms and ferns were dug out of the store room or borrowed, and the other jungle "effects" were obtained from the woods and fields near Scottsbluff and from posters. We quote from the newspaper story of the display:

"A thick grove of palms shot above an even denser undergrowth of foliage, providing a natural home for the more or less natural lions that looked out from the bushes, and apes that swung from overhead branches. The display set up under the artistic jungle eye of W. H. Osterburg, Jr., was one of the most effective the Orpheum has recently shown.

"In fact, the illusion might have been complete had not the passer-by observed the sure sign of civilization—the ticket window with its quotations on the war tax."

Display and story, with the usual amount of billing and advertising, served to bring the fans out in force for the two-day showing of "The Revenge of Tarzan."

Kinema Theatre Stages Novel Prologue

Los Angeles Theatre Gives "45 Minutes from Broadway" Excellent Presentation

A VERY novel prologue and one that is not too expensive for even the smaller houses of the country was recently staged by the Kinema theatre of Los Angeles, California, in the presentation of "Peaceful Valley."

A cross-section of one room of a country home occupied one half of the stage while a door led from this room out to a small porch and thence to the yard of the home.

The room, which represented an old fashioned parlor, boasted one of the horn phonographs of years ago, brightly colored wall paper and a reading table with a brilliant red calico cover. As the lighting for the room was furnished entirely by the shaded lamp on the table, with what little aid was gained from the light of the log fire, the shaded effects were beautiful.

On the back porch there rested an old, galvanized metal wash tub, sober reminder of the good old Saturday night recognized by farmers and farm hands alike. A bench on which sat a wash basin and a pitcher of water, a towel hanging on a nail outside the door and a few vines growing up the posts supporting the roof of the porch added immeasurably to the realistic effect desired.

The yard was nothing less than a masterpiece all of its own. An old picket fence, that one who had ever lived in the country could easily imagine as a part of their own home, ran across the stage from the house. Just outside this fence and to the extreme left of the stage stood a well with the usual "old oaken bucket" resting on the top of the stone and mortar protection. The well was covered with a shelter so often seen over the wells of that type in Alabama and Tennessee as well as other Southern states where the life of the country still exists as of yore.

A background of trees furnished the garnishment necessary to make the scene one of extreme beauty while the lighting effects were of the brightly shining moon casting its shadows and lights among the branches of the trees. For the most part the trees were part of the scenery property of the theatre, but to make it even more realistic branches of real trees were scattered throughout and around the house.

To open the little scene the man walked through the yard and into the house, singing "The Old Oaken Bucket." A moment's pause beside the well and a glance at the bucket gave the audience the sequence of the song. Entering the house, he bent over and lit the light, then the fireplace. As the flames flared up the room was lit with a subdued light of deep red tone.

Suddenly the man ceased his humming and raised himself as though to listen. From what seemed to be the far distance came the whistling of a songbird and presently the girl entered, whistling (a professional whistler played this role) a song and introducing the notes of the birds of the Woodland. She entered the room, where the man hastened to make her at home. Her whistling ended, she turned on the phonograph and the soft notes of a violin played across the air. Then she added to the music by picking up a violin that lay on the table and playing an accompaniment to the phonograph, and presently broke into a soft whistle. As the last notes of the song were dying down, the man started humming and the chorus was again played, the phonograph, the whistle, the violin and the man singing, the curtains slowly closing on perfect harmony.

Rivoli Presenting Prologue for "The Testing Block"

AS a prologue for "The Testing Block," playing this week at the Rivoli theatre, New York, Managing Director Reisenfeld is presenting Carl Rollins, baritone, and the Rivoli male chorus, dressed as cowboys in a series of Western and male quartette songs.

A stage setting showing a scene similar to those in which the exteriors of the Hart picture are filmed is used for the number. In the distance are mountains with pine trees, a river and other typical objects in the foreground.

The act begins with the actor cowboys sitting about for the singing of an old time favorite. Later they rise and sing typical camp songs. The finish is a chorus of pistol shots fired in the air. The lighting is for night with a moon a part of the stage setting drop.

Stellings Strong for Novelty Throwaways

Ernest Stellings, manager of the Grand theatre, Wilmington, N. C., is a firm believer in the efficiency of inexpensive herald novelties as exploitation mediums. One of his recent innovations in this line was a six-page little booklet for "What's Your Husband Doing?"

It was labeled "For Women Only" on the opening page and on the other pages contained questions based on the title of the picture, inferring that the male of the species needed watching.

Skinner's Campaign for "Humoresque"

Buffalo Residential House Sets Fast Exploitation Pace

ARTHUR L. SKINNER is the man who sits in the office of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, one of the finest neighborhood houses in the state, and figures out new ideas in "vicinity exploitation," in which he has become a trail blazer. Arthur is not a believer in the theory that just because one of the big downtown houses presents a certain production for an extended period to big business, that his patrons are sold on the picture and that no further effort is necessary to put it over on its arrival in the outlying districts of the city.

Last week the Victoria theatre pilot presented "Humoresque" for the entertainment of his "customers" with a series of excellent exploitation stunts. To start his campaign Mr. Skinner arranged an excellent tieup with a new Victrola store near his theatre. He persuaded the manager of the store to stick a horn through a window on the second floor through which a Victrola record continually poured forth the strains of "Humoresque." Passersby could not help but notice the music, and stopping to find out whence it came, were confronted with two windows jammed with photographs from the picture play at the Victoria. Several other attractive trims were put over in various vicinity stores.

Perhaps the decoration inside the Victoria was the most interesting. Mr. Skinner transformed the "sitting room" which opens directly off the lobby into a music room, in which he installed a piano, a Victrola and a local violinist, who before each show in the evening and as the audiences were flocking in, played the Dvorak classic. When the violinist had finished the Victrola started and some of the world famous violinists played the same number.

A prologue for "Humoresque" was also put on in excellent manner. Following the weekly and scenic, Mr. Skinner flooded his house with light gradually dimming as the organist improvised. Then followed a rendition of "Kol Nedri," with the chimes being used. Each time the chimes were "hammered" a bunch of lights went out in the house. When the theatre was in darkness, the stage gradually was illuminated, a blue blending into a heavy blue, to cherry, to deep purple. The stage was then flooded with a purple light and in the wings Alphonse Schneider, a prominent local violin virtuoso, began to play "Humoresque," softly, increasing in volume as he approached the center of the stage. Arriving in full view of the audience an amber spotlight "was thrown right in his face" and the entire orchestra took up the accompaniment. As the solo neared the end, the feature faded into the screen.

In return for a small card placed in a corner of the "music room" Mr. Skinner was able to get some of the finest furniture for the display from a big store near the theatre. Mr. Skinner has worked up this cooperation idea to a point where he is having every merchant in the vicinity of the Victoria plugging for him. One grocer is giving away cards, supplied by Mr. Skinner, which entitles the bearer to a five-cent reduction on a ticket for the Staurday matinee. Mr. Skinner figures it is worth the five cents to build up his business for this show. This tieup is in force for a month only. "Art" is continually giving special shows in cooperation with organizations in the neighborhood, the whole resulting in making the Victoria a certain "home" proposition.

"No house need fear for business, if a manager will play up this community spirit idea," says Mr. Skinner. "In fact it is almost an absolute necessity. One must make every member of every family in the vicinity a fan for his house. Once accomplished this pays large dividends at the box office. No neighborhood manager can 'live apart' from his patrons, sit in his office and count the receipts and hope that the next day's will be as large. He has got to 'mix in.'"

It might be mentioned that the Victoria is now doing more business than at any time in its history. There's a reason.

Saginaw Deluged in "What's Your Hurry?" Campaign

Saginaw, Mich., was greeted with a regular barrage of exploitation when "What's Your Hurry," the Wallace Reid starring vehicle, played at the Mecca-Palace theatre in that city. Exploitation representative L. F. Whelan, of the Detroit Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, made the trip to the Michigan city and placarded every automobile, telephone post and store with the sign, using every conceivable dodge to bring the title slogan to bear upon every line of business.

As the crowning feat of his ingenuity, an anti-speed campaign against automobilists was inaugurated with "What's Your Hurry" as its keynote; the Saginaw Chambers of Commerce used the campaign as the leading article for the current issue of its bulletin; the Saginaw News-Courier published several editorials on careful motor driving under the caption, "What's Your Hurry"; and His Honor, Mayor B. N. Mercer, imbibing the spirit of the campaign, proclaimed a "What's Your Hurry" day, October 2, as a warning to motorists to "stop, look and listen."

The Chamber of Commerce Bulletin was perhaps as forceful as any article ever written, for it adopted the slogan after having recognized its advertising potentiality.

Cady Does Things for "Scratch My Back"

Claude Cady, manager of the Gladmer theatre, Lansing, Michigan, with the co-operation and assistant of C. C. Deardorff, division publicity manager for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, worked out an experiment with Lansing photo fans in connection with his recent engagement of "Scratch My Back," that proved highly satisfactory both psychologically and financially. Everybody's interested in the inexplicable, so Cady started out with an unknown quantity. The unknown quantity was a Mystery Girl and from the time a girl, dressed in black, and wearing a black satin face mask, stepped out of the train, until she was safely registered at the Kearns' Hotel, she was followed by a regular procession of inquisitives. This all happened on the Thursday preceding the Sunday opening of "Scratch My Back." The Lansing State Journal fell right in with the plan, and gave the mystery girl prominent space in its news section.

That Thursday happened to fall on Armistice Day. There was a big parade in Lansing in honor of the country's heroes, and Cady lost no time in getting in on the procession. The Reo Motor Car Company offered one of their limousines and placarded on both sides with "WHO IS SHE?" the mystery girl trailed the soldiers up one street and down the other, the only uninvited guest of the parade. She got fully as much attention from the large crowds as did the soldiers.

On Friday, the newspaper continued to give the girl front place prominence, wondering who she was, and what was her business. And on Saturday, it came out with an expose story, telling the whole tale. At the same time, the girl rode around town in the Reo car, and gave everybody a chance to see her and to read from placards attached to the car, what her business in Lansing was.

The big laugh, however, and the stunt that caught the town like wildfire, was what took place at the theatre at the opening performance. Apparently, all was as usual when the show commenced. Seated in the boxes were many prominent people, so the girl in evening clothes, and the man, dressed to match, who occupied a box, were not particularly conspicuous. The show opened. There was music, followed by a comedy, and this, in turn, by a news reel. At the conclusion of the news reel, all lights were suddenly turned off. The house was in utter darkness for the flash of a second. But during that second, a woman's scream sounded all through the house. The lights were on again in an instant. The whole thing didn't take longer than the blink of an eye. But the lights that went on were focused straight on the box containing the girl and man in evening clothes. She looked distressed. She was twitching her shoulders in a manner denoting discomfort. Her companion wasn't paying any attention to her. She kept on twitching her shoulders until finally, desperate, she touched her companion on the arm, and motioned to her back. Then he leaned forward, and, as the accompanying photograph shows, he scratched her back.

Helmts Doing Things Again

That Middle West live wire, E. H. Helmts, manager of the Rialto theatre, Des Moines, has been doing things again.

His engagement of "Civilian Clothes," suggested that the picture was a good one to hook up with local merchants in various advertising stunts, so he went out one afternoon and the result was a great window display with a Des Moines clothier (accompanying cut illustrates how same was arranged) and a page display ad at a total cost to the Rialto of $32.50.

According to Mr. Helmts business was great for both the Rialto and the clothing firm that went in with him on the stunt.

On the engagement of "The Devil's Passkey" Mr. Halmts adopted a teaser advertising campaign and succeeded in exciting the curiosity of everybody in Des Moines who ever goes to pictures

For "What Women Love," the exploitation campaign included an unusual number of 24-sheet stands, and a number of novelties among which were blotters gotten up in clever fashion.

The "mystery girl" used by Claude Cady, manager of the Gladmer theatre, Lansing, Mich., for the engagement of "Scratch My Back," as described in the accompanying story

Service Is Strong's Long Suit

Talk about service. The Strand of Syracuse, N. Y., has it these days 100 per cent plus. It is not so much in itself, but it is scoring heavily with the patrons of the house, at least with the male sex.

A young man is stationed in the rear of the house, and if one is to judge from appearances, his sole business is to assist the men with their overcoats.

And it is done without any of the outward manifestations of the ever present tip expected, all of which adds to one's pleasure.

"May I assist you with your overcoat?" inquires the young man. The overcoat slips on, possible congestion is diverted, and all in all, the idea is worth while.

Johnson Uses Teaser Campaign for "Good References"

Herbert H. Johnson, manager of the Luna theatre, Lafayette, Ind., has the honor of originating a new teaser advertising idea for "Good References" that ought to be widely copied.

Mr. Johnson's teaser campaign cost no more than two additional inches of newspaper space (which, incidentally, was left blank), and at the same time brought several hundred letters to the theatre as an evidence of the interest aroused. For instance, this following word comprised newspaper advertisements used several days in advance of the opening day's engagement of the feature:

"What is it that every housewife demands of her cook?

"What must every banker show his patrons?

"What is it every father requires of his prospective son-in-law?

"What does every child expect of his parents?

"What is more valuable in establishing oneself in a community than gold, beauty, fine clothes?"

An additional sentence announced that prizes would be given by the newspaper for the correct answer to the questions.

The advertisement ran for three days in the paper, hundreds of answers being received but those responding having been kept wholly in the dark regarding the purpose of the questions.

On the fourth day the correct answer was published. It was "Good References," with the added information that the picture by this title was to be played at the Luna the following week.

Rogers and His Lobby Paintings

Another of the artistic lobby paintings which E. R. Rogers, manager of the Tennessee Enterprises, Inc., theatres of Chattanooga, Tenn., uses to sell seats to the theatres under his direction is reproduced above.

This cabin was made out of real logs and the frosted window pane cast an amber light, while a "spot" shot salmon colored streaks on the snow in front of the hut. In behind the chimney could be seen the pink rays of the morning sun, which blended into the deep blue of the sky. The foreground was pink while the left-hand corner cast a red glow. A mass of frosted trees were shown in the corner with the colors reflected by imitation snow. The display was used at the Rialto on one of the S. A. Lynch string.

Mystery Girl Stunt Works Once More

The "mystery" girl refuses to die in picture exploitation and proves just as much alive and just as effective, if properly introduced in a town, now as she did upon her first appearance in forgotten antiquity. An exploitation stunt is never too old to use if the exhibitor or the exploitation man brings a little ingenuity to bear upon the method of introducing it. In other words, an exploitation stunt is just as old as it is presented.

C. C. Deardourff, Goldwyn's exploitation representative at the Cleveland exchange, resurrected the mystery girl and sent her to Jackson, Mich., to exploit the showing of "Scratch My Back," at the Majestic theatre. The Jackson News was tipped off as to the arrival of the mystery girl and a reporter was assigned to the job of watching her, resulting in a two-column head story for three days with a photograph of herself masked with the first story and two photos, masked and unmasked, on the third day.

On her first day in Jackson the masked girl registered at the Otsego Hotel, after creating a great stir at the station and in the hotel lobby. She visited department stores and shops. She rode about the city in an automobile. In the evening, still masked, she sat in a box at the performance of "Three Wise Fools." On the day "Scratch My Back" was to open its engagement a male companion accompanied her on her drives through the city and at intervals the mystery girl would lower her fur cape, displaying a bare back and her companion would lean forward and vigorously scratch the exposed back. Then a card bearing the words "Scratch My Back at the Majestic Theatre" would be dropped over the side of the automobile.

The reporter let on that he was taken in by the affair until the back-scratching stunt was pulled and he wrote live news stories about her doings that proved the best kind of exploitation.

Omaha's "Movie" Event

Complete Details Concerning Presentations at Strand and Rialto for "Go to the Movies" Week

OMAHA'S "Go to the Movies" week was resultant in the production of two exceedingly well devised prologues in keeping with the spirit of the exhibitors who cooperated to make the event a memorable one in the annals of motion picture history of the city.

The Rialto, the largest of Omaha's motion picture houses, and the Strand were the two which chose this form of presentation as the specialty with which to emphasize the celebration.

"Dawn in the North Woods" was the title given the prologue at the Strand. The setting was a scene in the north woods with a cabin in the foreground. The scene opened in darkness, the orchestra playing a descriptive piece of night sounds in which the call of the whippoorwill was featured. The lighting of the stage slowly changed to semi-gloom, as the orchestra changed to the calls of morning birds. The background sky became brighter and as an orange glow appeared the stage setting appeared in its sumptuousness.

The outer walls of the cabin were nearly covered with skins loaned by a local furrier and an appearance of realness was given to the river bank in the background by the sight of a canoe drawn up on it. Time was given for the audience to appreciate the setting, and then the door of the cabin opened for the entrance of a hunter, singing a little French chanson. He continued singing while he lighted his fire and put breakfast on to cook. His breakfast completed, he shouldered his pack, which he brought from the cabin, and walked off stage still singing. During the time he was on the stage the lighting effects had been cleverly manipulated to give the effect of a near approach of a rising sun, and the scene ended just as the back drop was flooded with the pinks and oranges of early morn that herald the coming of the sun. As the hunter made his exit the running of "The Nomads of the North," which, as the feature attraction of the week, was commenced with the voice of the singer still audible, although gradually growing lower and fainter.

The prologue at the Rialto also started with a darkened stage. A small circle spot light revealed only the head of a singer as he rendered the first verse and chorus of "That Wonderful Mother of Mine," a song that has been a terrific hit in Omaha. During the applause after the singer had withdrawn the stage was lightened and the setting of Peaceful Valley farm was disclosed. The singer started the second verse of the song off stage and then made his entrance carrying a little dog which resembled "Whiskers," the pet of Charles Ray, which is seen so often in the production.

"Viking Song" Capitol Specialty Number

THE Capitol theatre is presenting an unusual vocal number this week in the rendition of Greig's "Song of the Viking," by Erik Bye, the Norwegian baritone, who is making his debut in America assisted by the Capitol male ensemble.

Mr. Bye gives the song, a story of the military adventures of the Viking king, "Sigurd," a popular Norwegian hero of the 12th century, in the original and a stage setting and costumes appropriate to the composition have been provided.

The stage setting shows a 12th century Norwegian sailing craft with sails set and a water expanse below the skyline. The singers wear the costumes of the period of the story and are equipped with swords and shields of the Norwegian warriors.

Mr. Bye is filling an indefinite engagement, the first in America, at the Capitol.

How Horater Exploited "Earthbound"

H. C. Horater, managing director of the Alhambra and Pantheon theatres in Toledo, pulled off and especially strong exploitation stunt of a high class nature this week, in connection with his two-weeks engagement of "Earthbound" at the Pantheon, which began Sunday, November 28.

Horater invited as many representative citizens as he could muster together—some 350 people in all—and gave them a private showing of "Earthbound" at the Pantheon theatre. There were all the city officials; representatives of the press; members of the Federated Women's Clubs; representatives of the Y. W. C. A., of the Y. M. C. A., of the Women Voters' League of Toledo and of the Chamber of Commerce.

C. C. Deardorff, who is in command of the publicity department for Goldwyn in these parts, preceded the showing of "Earthbound" with a clever talk. "You all have been clamoring for better pictures," he told them. "You have criticized many of the pictures now shown on the screens, and have deplored them. You have asked for pictures of an intellectual value. 'Earthbound' is such a picture. If you are in earnest about wanting better pictures, then, after seeing 'Earthbound go out into the city, and tell the people that this is the picture they have been waiting for."

Horater doesn't do things by halves. He gave his guests the best he had to offer. He gave them a complete show, with full orchestra, and presented "Earthbound" as it was to be presented during its regular engagement, with the same electrical effects that were so successfully employed at the Astor theatre in New York.

Kantner Puts Over Big Stunt

Indianapolis, "Something to Think About" Campaign Brings Big Business to the Ohio

"SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT," playing at the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., came in for an exploitation campaign that set a new standard for Indianapolis theatres.

Oscar A. Kantner, exploitation representative for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Indianapolis exchange had charge of the exploitation which was centered in tie-ups in window displays and newspaper advertising with local merchants.

Twenty-two firms co-operated in newspaper advertising and nineteen permitted tie-ups in their windows. It was impossible to walk a block downtown without bumping into a show window with the legend, "Something to Think About," prominently displayed.

Electric supply houses, clothing dealers, shoe repair shops, clothing stores, sporting goods stores and almost every other kind of retail establishment fell in line with window displays.

The big smash came on the opening day when an eight-page supplement to the Indianapolis Sunday Star was run.

The window signs were made applicable to the particular business with the use of of a catch phrase under each "Something to Think About." Thus one of the electric shops' sign read, "Something to Think About." Make This An Electrical Christmas. Illuminate Your Home. The shoe repair shop sign was: "Something to Think About." Why Throw Away a Partly Worn out Pair of Shoes? Old Shoes Rebuilt Here, Not Cobbled. That's "Something to Think About." Get More Shoe Mileage from Your Old Shoes, That's "Something to Think About." One of the music shops advertised: "Something to Think About" Music in Your Home on Christmas Day, and another: "Something to Think About" Dad's Gift to the Family—It Should be a Brunswick. In a window full of toys for the kiddies to travel on one of the sporting goods stores put a sign reading: "Something to Think About" Children Like Things on Wheels.

Burns Decorates for "Trumpet Island"

Frank H. Burns transferred his activities from the S. A. Lynch houses at Jacksonville to Orlando, Fla., some three weeks go to do publicity work for the Orlando Enterprises, Inc., operating the Grand and the Phillips theatres, and just to demonstrate that he is a live wire started the exploitation ball rolling by arranging a lobby display for "Trumpet Island" that brought home the bacon.

On this page is a cut from a photograph of the Grand display. Mr. Burns built a huge pair of aeroplane wings in the lobby as shown in the cut and then borrowed a small local aeroplane. He reports that it is estimated that the display doubled the business for "Trumpet Island." The feature was run at the Grand theatre.

Hyman Specialty Makes Big Hit

That Brooklyn is indeed a city of homes was proved absolutely at the Brooklyn Strand theatre recently when Managing Director Edward L. Hyman brought the home idea out with full force in a novelty which had love and home as the main theme, and in which a specially designed scenic set, mechanical effects, soloists, lights and both instrumental and vocal music were utilized.

The idea rotated around "The Love Nest," a popular song hit from "Mary," and the Strand management in making the idea realistic had a wonderful model home built by the stage carpenter and also showed real doves cooing and billing in a tiny dove cote perched in the crotch of a tree above where two lovers wooed.

The theme, of course, was taken from the song. The back drop was the skyline of a great city with the night lights glimmering. The front set was a wooded nook with a great oak, around the base of which had been built a rustic seat.

As the curtains parted on the set the orchestra was flooded with blue lights showing a young girl in white party dress resting on the tree seat with a young man in evening dress. Above their heads, on a tree bough, was the nest of doves. To their right was the miniature home which is described so vividly in the words of the song. The pair of lovers sang the number. As the chorus was reached the tiny house was lighted up as if with the coming of dusk the newly married pair had flooded the home with light. The spot centered on the dove cote where the two birds nestled.

The use of the miniature "love nest" and the live doves in their little home added to the realism, and the careful distribution of the lighting effects all helped to make the novelty one which would appeal to all ages.

Johnson Puts Over Good Campaign for "Silver Horde"

Leroy V. Johnson, manager of the Alcazar, Great Falls, Mont., is a believer in exploitation. When he booked "The Silver Horde" he at once got busy on an inexpensive scheme for obtaining publicity. Mr. Johnson decorated his lobby front in such a manner as to strike the attention of all passers-by and at the same time give a hint as to the nature of the picture. At each side of the entrance arch he placed mounted paintings of tall pine trees heavily laden with snow. Across the upper part of the arch in large letters was the following: "Rex Beach's latest production, 'The Silver Horde.'" In the center of the archway, against the ticket booth, was a frame of "Silver Horde" stills, while on each lobby panel were three-sheet posters of the picture.

From the top of the small tower that surmounts the Alcazar theatre, Mr. Johnson swung a sixty-foot banner across the street to the top of another building. The same wording was used on the banner as was employed at the top of the entrance arch.

This exploitation cost almost nothing, yet it was done in such a manner as to strike the attention of almost anyone who happened to be downtown in Great Falls. The picture did a tremendous business, which speaks for the effectiveness of Mr. Johnson's work.

Criterion Staging Novelty Specialty

THE specialty number presented with the showing of "Midsummer Madness," opening Sunday at the Criterion theatre, New York, is titled "Four Seasons of Life," being four separate tableaus identified under the captions of "Childhood," "Sweethearts," "Marriage" and "Old Age."

A big circle cut out with black facing is used to screen the wings on all the numbers.

"Childhood" shows a pretty summer landscape with a practical well on which a child is seated when the drapes are parted. Later she recites a little poem about her lost doll and does a dance with another performer also dressed as a child. The scene is faded out and into "Sweethearts" showing a garden as a stage setting with a young couple attired in the costume of the Sixty's seated on a bench. They sing a ballad as a duet.

The third scene is a landscape showing hills, trees, etc., with three middle aged ladies grouped on the stage with an old fashioned cradle as a prop. The trio sing a song popular in the Seventy's and wear costumes of this period.

The fourth number goes to an interior set, a drop showing the wall of a house with a fireplace in the center and two windows on either side. Through the windows snow can be seen falling.

In front of the fire in rocking chairs are two old people. They sing one of the old time favorite songs.

The artists taking part in the cycle are Betty Anderson, soprano; Jean Booth, contralto; Georges Du Franne, tenor; Grace Eastman and Martha Shelby, assisted by members of Hugo Reisenfeld's new school of opera and ensemble. During the momentary waits between the numbers necessary to shift the sets the chorus sings off stage.

Importance of Mailing List Demonstrated

Some exhibitors who operate in small towns are prone to deny the importance of an accurate, up-to-date mailing list. T. C. Cary, of the Princess theatre, Honea Path, S. C., effectually proved, to his own satisfaction, at least, that this is a very grave error.

Business in the South is not in a flourishing state due to the failure of King Cotton, and the illness (from a business standpoint) of Duke Tobacco. But Mr. Cary believes that where there's a will, there's a way. And when he booked "Scratch My Back" he put on his thinking cap—and to good effect.

About ten days before the picture was to open, he began to get his mailing list together, paying particular attention to the newly-weds as named in the "Society" department of the local paper. So that, about a week before the picture opened, every man on the mailing list received a note—a pale pink "correspondence card" such as is used by "stylish" young ladies, on which, in a feminine hand, was written just "Scratch My Back." In place of a signature, there was a question-mark.

The cards had scarcely had time to be distributed by the postman, when the trouble began. Heaven only knows how many wholly innocent married men returned to their homes after a hard day's work, to meet an irate wife brandishing a rolling pin, and demanding to know the name of the "hussy."

The exploitation was successful, as many a man who narrowly escaped divorce proceedings will assure you.

Woodhead Makes the Most of Masque

How the Manager of the Globe Theatre, Clinton, Mass., Obtained Publicity for "Yes or No?"

BELIEVING that live newspaper stories represent an exploitation medium of infinite value, W. W. Woodhead, manager of the Globe theatre, Clinton, Mass., recently devised an advertiseing stunt calculated to inspire press stories and which had direct bearing on his successful showing of "Yes or No."

A prominent local dancing instructor held a costume dance in the municipal building and invited the general public. A fine was to be imposed upon those attending without fancy costume. Therefore, Manager Woodhead found two women willing to attend the dance at his expense, and in his interest, and at the same time quite willing to receive a sum of money for carrying out an advertising stunt which the local newspaper played up in grand style.

The grand march was scheduled to begin at 9 o'clock and partners were being selected by the young men when exactly at 8.50 P. M. two young girls, very attractive and apparently twins, entered the hall, passed by friends without saluting and seated themselves in a conspicuous place in the hall. Very unconcerned by the evening's proceedings and apparently unconscious that every eye in the hall was being cast upon them, the twins watched the fun. Their costumes were made of paper with the words "Yes or No" printed all over the skirt and waist. Their shoes were white with "Yes or No" painted all over them, and the same phrase spotted even their hair ribbons and stockings. Naturally they were the center of attraction. When the grand march began they refused gentlemen partners. Arm in arm, they marched up and down with all eyes on them and to their amusement heard remarks such as "Do you suppose it has anything to do with the liquor question?" passed about them.

A prize was offered by the dancing teacher for the couple with the best costumes, and when it came to a selection the judges kept their eyes on the twins in an attempt to solve what had become a matter of considerable curiosity on the part of the guests. The twins were awarded the prize, not altogether because of the beauty of their costumes but because of the impression they made, and when the girls were called to the stage to receive the award, they opened the skirts of their dresses, turned them inside out and revealed the fact that "Yes or No" was a feature picture booked for the Globe theatre in a few weeks.

The twins then explained to their friends the evident snubbing was a ruse to get them interested. During the remainder of the evening the duo congratulated themselves on their nights' work, for they not only enjoyed the dance but also won the prize, and Manager Woodhead's compensation.

The effect of the costumes was amazing. The next day, as was anticipated, it was the talk of the town and the evening newspaper came out with the story in headlines, praising Mr. Woodhead for his advertising genius. Manager Woodhead advises other exhibitors to try this stunt and assures them that if the opportunity is afforded them their twins will come out "headliners" as his did.

Creston, Iowa, Has a "Wild Man" Scare

Metzar's "Go and Get It" Stunt Makes Iowans Lie Awake Nights

FROM Creston, Iowa, and E. Metzgar of the Strand theatre of that city comes an exploitation for "Go and Get It" that is bound to attract attention. if a man who is not afraid of being shot up by excited citizens can be found to pull the stunt.

The stunt that Mr. Metzger put over was in connection with a special feature attraction that has already been exploited by a number of extra novel campaigns ranging from teaser stunts to cut-outs of an ape-man in the lobby. This, naturally, identifies the picture "Go and Get It." Mr. Metzger picked out what be believed to be the most gripping element in this box-office story, and brought it to life. That was why people began to believe the city was haunted when a creature that resembled a half-man-and-half-ape was seen by several very frightened Crestonians. There was a great deal of excitement. This strange species was seen just at dusk by a resident who received a real scare and then disappeared; but the story spread from mouth to mouth. This was just the beginning of other things which were going to happen to cause Creston people to feel that something strange and mysterious was in their midst. A lady returning to her home about dark again saw the object, which seemed to resemble a huge gorilla or ape. The fact that no one saw it only just at dark or too late to get a fair look at it and the fact that only two or three had seen it and could not fully describe its appearance, soon began to make the majority of the citizens believe that it was just a story; but the interest in the matter was kept at its height for the strange animal appeared at which seemed to be opportune times and then disappeared. The fact that there was really such a thing in the city, however, was soon to be made plain, for one evening, when the streets were filled with people, the animal appeared on top of the most prominent building in the city, hung over the edge for just a moment, uttering strange cries, and then utterly disappeared. A search failed to leave any sign of it, however. A day later, just one day before "Go and Get It" was to be shown at the Strand, the ape-face appeared in the window of one of the upper hotel rooms and uttered cries which soon attracted the attention. At last the animal was trapped and in a room. How had it got there and had it hurt the parties therein. An investigation was immediately made and the crowd proceeded to the room and upon looking over the transom thereof saw, not the animal which had appeared at the window, but one of the local boys reading. "Where did it go? Did he see it? What was it all about?" The youth was innocent of it all and still some wondered. On the night of the initial showing an ad appeared in the daily paper in the form of a news item stating Mr. E. Metzger, manager of the Strand theatre, had captured that strange animal which had been seen by the citizens upon various occasions and would have it on display at his theatre that evening in connection with his regular show. It need not be said that Mr. Metzger packed his house both days and that while some thought this stunt a little too serious the officials of the city who were in on it were inclined to laugh and the rest laughed with them. The cost of pulling off the exploitation stunt was slight in comparison with the results which were obtained. The equipment, which consisted of only a gorilla costume which was rented at Des Moines for a few days, cost only a moderate sum and the services of the local youth were secured at wages which were reasonable indeed. "Some time the most inexpensive stunts which I have pulled in this city are the ones which have gotten me the biggest results," says Manager Metzger. "First plan on just how much you can afford to spend, in order to put your features over in a way that will bring you the biggest returns. In order to pull the stunt in a manner which will make them sit up and take notice, and insure the fact that the man playing the gorilla part will not get shot or injured by some of his fellow citizens you should get in touch with the local police force and then go after the newspaper reporters.

Finds Programs Used as Heralds Good Exploitation

J. L. Johnston, advertising manager for the Finkelstein and Ruben Enterprises, Minneapolis, has found that the distribution of several thousand programs for the New Garrick and New Lyric theatres each week is a cheap form of advertising productive of very good results.

These programs are placed in the better class of apartment buildings in and on the outskirts of the downtown district and in the leading hotels.

Part of the Keith's 81st Street theatre exploitation for the showing of "Good References" as described below

Here's a New One for "Good References"

Jazzing up little old New York with an automobile load of characters from whom no one would expect good references is the way Frank Gerard and Eddie Lewis, manager and exploitation director, respectively, of the Eighty-first Street theatre, jammed that house full for a week's showing on "Good References."

The automobile carried a vamp, a convict, a bell hop and a "Broadway Rose." A man in the uniform of a prison guard with a rifle over his shoulder gave effectiveness to the sign that was exhibited on each side of the car:

"We May Not Look As If We Had
"GOOD REFERENCES
at
"Keith's 81st Street Theatre."

The automobile made the rounds of the New York business streets during the daylight hours. During the evening performance the bell hop was on duty in front of the theatre with a large sign reading:

"STOP!
"Where Are Your References?

Girls.	Men.
Do you shimmie?	Do you wear spats?
Do you smoke?	Have you a mother-in-law?
Can you cook home brew?	Do you crochet?

Zorn Digs Out the Personal Guarantee

Edward A. Zorn recently used a very elaborate series of "guaranteed production" display ads for "Behold My Wife" when this picture played the Temple theatre, Toledo, Ohio, of which Mr. Zorn is manager, with such excellent results that this somewhat old form of publicity is to be continued for such pictures as are booked that the management thinks are good enough to deserve it.

Mr. Zorn's ads were orthodox announcements for the picture, giving the title, cast and a short line or two of selling talk, to which was added the personal guarantee under a cut signature. The displays were used in all three of the Toledo papers with box-office results a few dollars short of the high water mark. The Temple advertising is prepared by E. G. Bride, the People's Amusement Company's publicity director.

Ruffner's Exploitation for "Behold My Wife"

An attractive lobby display and unusual outdoor exploitation were the two features of the presentation of "Behold My Wife" at the Strand theatre, Seattle, last week.

Ralph Ruffner, manager of the theatre, whose lobbies are noted for their smart appearance, batted 1.000 per cent on his latest endeavor. The white painted trimmings of the doors and panels showed up to specially favorable advantage against the settings for a picture that dealt largely with outdoor life and incidents in the Canadian snows. The streamer with the title, running across the entire length of the top of the lobby, carried a snow scene in which the names of the featured players and Christmas trees with a waste of snow land in the Canadian wilds were portrayed. At the left of the lobby was a statuesque ten-foot cutout of Mabel Julienne Scott, taken from the 24-sheet lithograph.

As outside exploitation, two sisters employed by the Seattle F. P. exchange were induced to portray the parts of the wife of "Behold My Wife"

Minneapolis House Gives "Earthbound" Good Campaign

Several columns of publicity for "Earthbound" were obtained in the Minneapolis newspapers when the picture opened there at the Blue Mouse theatre on the fact that little "Billie" Cotton, who plays the part of the child in "Earthbound," was born in Minneapolis. Each of the three big dailies in the city ran a story about the little girl with a photograph several days before the showing, in addition to playing up reproductions of stills in which she figured in their Sunday amusement sections and singling her out for special mention in the reviews. The girl's father still lives in Minneapolis.

Aside from exploiting the fact that "Billie" was a Minneapolitan, the publicity campaign for the Minneapolis showing of "Earthbound" was confined to the regular channels of billboard and newspaper advertising.

Howard, Exploitation Man, Turns Poet

Following is a poem written by John D. Howard, Famous Players-Lasky exploitation representative from the San Francisco exchange, and mailed to all the salesmen in the West Coast territory:

DRIVE IT HOME

How's your punch, how's your pep,
Can you stand the last test
That will make Nineteen-Twenty
Not just "better" but "best"?

How's your nerve, how's your grit?
Have you gained or stood still?
Don't slacken the pace, boys,
Say "I must" and "I will."

If you fail, come back strong,
Make the last two months count.
You're not licked 'till you're dead.
Drive it home—Paramount.

Schaefer Featuring His Musicians

Of the thirteen musicians comprising the orchestra of the William Fox Liberty theatre, five are members of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra. With this fact in view Manager Schaefer arranged one of the most daring musical programs ever offered a local motion picture audience. More than one-half of the program, in which "The Stealers" was featured, was devoted to classical musical numbers in the form of a symphony concert.

To begin with Schaefer obtained the list of over 3,000 subscribers to the symphony fund. To each of these he sent an attractive announcement which stated that the next week's program would more resemble a symphonic concert than a motion picture arrangement. All were invited to attend and the majority did. Schaefer discovered early that St. Louis is a music loving town and that anything which was tied up in any way with good music was certain to succeed. Anything that tied up with the Symphony Orchestra was bound to succeed big. And his plan was a success.

The musical numbers were arranged by Director Herbert Hochman, however, each individual musician played the piece which had gained the greatest amount of favor for him in the eyes of the symphony followers, thus insuring double success at the Liberty.

How Jack Lourie Put Over "Love"

Jacob Lourie is a business man and a showman.

That's why this impresario of the Park, Modern and Beacon theatres of Boston, appreciated the vast exploitation possibilities in the tag day propaganda conceived for the benefit of Louise Glaum in "Love."

Sig Schlaper, J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, representative, went to Boston, arranged with the biggest hotels to hang the "Louise Glaum Tag" on all dining room table lamps and to sell them for the benefit of the Boston American Christmas Tree Fund.

He supplied several thousand tags to the American and also arranged a special showing of "Love" at the Park for the Saturday morning at the end of the week of showing—the proceeds accruing to the American fund.

The tieup pledged columns of free publicity for Lourie in the most difficult type of newspaper to interest in exploiting any but Hearst pictures. It brought the Park picture layouts in the American and the fullest meed of journalistic co-operation.

Del Monte Theatre Stages Fashion Show

One of the most daring and at the same time artistically unique presentations that ever accompanied a motion picture feature in St. Louis theatres was attempted last week by the Del Monte in connection with the showing of "Silk Hosiery."

The "Fashion Revue," as it was called in the total of three solid pages of newspaper advertising which preceded the opening, consisted of an array of twenty-two local and New York models who displayed gowns, dresses, and suits of fashion's latest decree. A specially built causeway led from off the stage and extended over several rows of the audience, thus permitting the models to preen their feathers in close view of even those who sat in the rear of America's largest one-floor theatre.

One of the main features of the revue was the displaying of a $30,000 chinchilla coat of knee's length which was borrowed from New York especially for the occasion. The revue of Spring styles was conducted during both evening and one afternoon performances.

Rothapfel Has Prologue for "Billions"

As a prologue for "Billions," the current attraction at the Capitol theatre, S. L. Rothapfel is staging an elaborate ballet and vocal number under the title of "In a Russian Gypsy Camp."

With a stage setting showing a hill rising to a sky line of futurist design, Doris Niles, Mlle. Sergeeva and Leon Leonidow, and the Russian Cathedral Choir present original Russian folk dances and folk songs.

The scene is a Russian Gypsy camp with a bucket sweep well and a camp fire dressing the stage.

The various dances and different native melodies used have been synchronized into what is practically an opera. The players are attired in Russian Gypsy costume. The dances, including a specialty number under the title of "Russian Buffon Dance," given by Mlle. Sergeeva and Leon Leonidow, were staged by Alexander Oumansky, while the musical score is arranged by K. M. Buketoff, director of the Cathedral Choir. The settings are by John Wenger.

Bakery Provides Ideal Exploitation Medium

Searching for a medium to get his exploitation before the largest number of people, Albert S. Nathan, exploitation representative of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the Buffalo territory, connected with Cahill's bakery in Syracuse. He worked a tie-up with the bakery and Paramount pictures showing at the Crescent theatre.

Since bread is the one article which goes into practically every home the tie-up was attended by phenomenal success. Exploitation slips were included in every wrapper in which the loaves were sent out. The first one was on "The Right to Love" good bread.

The success and interest resulting from the first attempt made the Cahill Bakery a convert to the cause of motion picture exploitation and ever since their facilities have been at the disposal of Mr. Nathan and the Crescent theatre.

Subsequent exploitation slips have advertised "Something to Think About. When You Want Pure Food for All the Family Order Cahill's Perfection Bread and See 'Something to Think About,' a Paramount Picture at the Crescent Theatre," and "Behold My Wife." The latter picture fitted in splendidly with the baking establishment, the exploitation copy reading "Behold My Wife! She Used to Make Her Own Bread. Now She Buys Cahill's Perfection Bread."

Stillman, Cleveland, Stages Overture Novelty

"A Few Musical Moments with Masters, Past and Present," was the title of the novelty overture featured on last week's bill at the Stillman theatre.

In connection with modelling the heads of world famous composers shown on the screen Musical Director Hyman L. Spitalny arranged a high class musical setting that was vigorously applauded.

"Military Polonaise" accompanied the moulding of the head of Chopin. Next came Liszt, while the orchestra played "Rhapsodie Hongroise." "The Moonlight Sonata," played softly, while the artist produced the head of Beethoven from a mass of clay. This was followed by the Miserere from "Il Trovatore," as the features of Verdi gradually took shape. Mendelssohn appeared on the screen gradually to the strains of the familar "Spring Song." Coming to the modern musicians, Mischa Elman's features appeared while "Humoresque" was played by the orchestra. Caruso's lips were closed while the quartet from "I Pagliacci" was being played. Sousa's replica was roundly applauded when it appeared simultaneous to the playing of "The Stars and Stripes Forever." "You're a Grand Old Flag," with George M. Cohan's bust, and "I Love a Lassie," with Harry Lauder on the screen brought the novelty to a close.

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

C. B. Price, of the C. B. Price Company, was in Chicago last week exploiting the picture entitled, "Your Daughter and Mine." Bert Lubin was also in town showing his latest production which is entitled, "Honeymoon Ranch."

Chicago is to have another loop theatre, according to plans being made by the Syndicate Theatre Owners, of which Harry M. Ortenstein is president. The house will be located on Adams street, east of State, and ground will be broken soon after the first of year, according to reports.

The first Sherman Productions, Incorporated, features, "Man and Woman" and "Miss 139," are ready for booking. The Sherman Productions are being handled in this territory by the Superior Screen Service, and Messrs. Weiss and Aiken are preparing a big exploitation campaign to put them over in a big way. Harry Sherman was in the city last week conferring with the Superior officials, and while here entertained Dustin Farnum and his director, Ernest Ward, who were passing through on their way to the Coast. It is rumored that Sherman Productions will handle the pictures produced by Farnum, who has completed his contract with Robertson-Cole.

Dr. Sam Atkinson, business manager of the Allied Amusements Association, left this week for New York, and will remain in the East for about a week.

It is understood that plans are being drawn by Burnham & Co. for a new theatre in Evanston. They already have one theatre there known as the Hoyburn.

Henry Igle, of the Chicago Censor Board, recently was married to Miss Harriet Van Buren, who formerly was chief inspector at First National Exchange. Henry, although a censor, is a popular member of the industry, and his many friends are offering him their congratulations on becoming benedick.

W. H. Hill, who for the last year had charge of First National's publicity department in the Chicago territory, has resigned to accept a similar position with Universal, succeeding Harry Rice. A. W. Gilliam, it is understood, will become publicity man for First National. Mr. Hill has made a splendid record during his connection with the First National Exchange of Chicago, and before that was connected with the Famous Players-Lasky offices at Chicago and Pittsburgh, and also has a wide experience as a theatre manager.

There are persistent reports around the exchanges that Dee Robinson, owner of the Madison and Appolo theatres at Peria, has taken over the Irwin theatre in Bloomington, Ill. These reports have not yet been confirmed, but well-informed theatre men believe they are true.

C. D. Sigler has opened his new theatre at Tolleston, Ind. which will be known as the Tolleston theatre. He will operate it as a high-grade picture house.

Ben Weissenbach has been added to the staff of Celebrated Players Film Corporation as city salesman. He resigned a similar position with Associated Producers to take the new job.

Joseph Kline, of D. M. Schwab Pictures, has disposed of that company's entire product featuring David Butler, to President Vandawalker of the Doll-Van Film Corporation of Illinois.

Arrow Film Company's production, "The Golden Trail," featuring Jane Novak, has been taken by the Superior Screen Service for Illinois and Indiana.

A. J. Hill, owner of the Glenn theatre, Armitage Avenue, has gone to the hospital, where he will undergo a serious operation.

Lila Lee was given a unique and mighty hearty home-coming welcome when she spent several days in Chicago recently. The climax of a long series of attentions from friends and the public in general, was a banquet at Miss Lee's father's North Side Turner Hall. More than two hundred persons were present as the guests of Charles Appel, Miss Lee's daddy. Miss Peggy Lee, a protege of David Belasco, also was on hand. Newspaper men, from managers to financial reporters, dramatic editors, feature writers, and even Dan O'Leary, veteran reporter of Chicago, were among those present. Official Chicago was there in the persons of aldermen and corporation counsel. Attorney Sulten, Miss Lila Lee's guardian, also was there. Miss Lee's family was given a private view of "Midsummer Madness" at the Paramount Exchange. Miss Lee's wonderfully fine work in this picture made everybody say that Lila's hope for the future is particularly bright.

A. P. Desormeaux, of the Strand theatre, Madison, Wis., was in Chicago this week. He was seen at the Paramount Exchange with his booking sheets and reported a record breaker on "Humoresque."

Kankakee is to have a new, big picture house. Lease on property for a big theatre has been secured by Wm. Cadoret, who owns the La Petite theatre. He will start building as soon as possible.

Ascher Brothers' West Englewood theatre will be open on or about Christmas Eve. The West Englewood, located at Sixty-third and Marshfield avenue, will add another link to the now large chain of Ascher Brothers' theatres. This beautiful theatre will be operated on the same plan as Aschers' Chateau theatre on Broadway and Grace street, offering only the highest standard of motion pictures and vaudeville.

Ascher Brothers have added two new names to their large staff of theatre managers. G. E. Braddock, who has made a reputation as a theatre manager throughout the Northwest, and Geo. E. Aylsworth, former manager of the Princess theatre in Calgary, Alberta, Canada, being the newcomers.

H. J. Brown, recently exploitation and sales manager for Colonel Fred Levey's First National Louisville headquarters, has returned to Chicago from Des Moines, Iowa, after a visit with A. G. Stolte, manager of the Des Moines A. H. Bland theatre, "Des Moines." Mr. Brown states that Mr. Stolte's presentation in the Highway theatre was worth making a long trip to view. Mr. Brown says that the Des Moines theatre is where music and pictures meet.

Douglass D. Rothacker, manager of the Rothacker Film Company's Industrial Division, was host at the Cafe Boulevard to the members of the New York Industrial Division. The eastern Industrial Division has been established less than a year, but, according to Mr. Rothacker, the results achieved thus far were such as an organization established ten years might be proud of. Mr. Rothacker said that the Chicago, St. Louis, Peoria, Milwaukee and Cleveland Divisions were batting an average which he hoped would be surpassed by the eastern division. "The achievements of the various Rothacker branches are proving an inspiration to each other," he said. Mr. Rothacker predicted that the coming year would be three hundred per cent bigger than any year the practical picture field has ever known.

B. Herbert Milligan reports that Barney Fagan of the Independent Film Exchange of St. Louis has purchased "The Freedom of Ireland" for Southern Illinois and Eastern Missouri. Mr. Milligan has sold the rights to the same picture for Western Missouri and Kansas City to the Independent Film Company of Missouri. About sixty per cent of the United States territory has now been sold on "The Freedom of Ireland" and deals which are now pending will probably bring this to one hundred per cent within a very few days. Mr. Milligan has moved into his new offices at 404 Consumers Building.

Harry Rice, business manager, Independent Films Association, is in New York this week. During his eastern visit he will confer with several producers in regard to taking over their productions for distribution through Independent.

Walter C. Hyland, who has been connected with the Universal Chicago Exchange for six years, and for the last three years has been booker, has been promoted to service manager to fill the position made vacant by the resignation of R. C. Smith. It is understood that Mr. Smith has had an exceptionally good offer from a New York film concern which he has accepted. In announcing the promotion of Mr. Hyland, Manager Lesserman stated it was his policy, wherever possible, to reward good work by the members of the organization by giving them the preference.

Gollos and Gollos Film Company announce that they have purchased "The Sacred Flame" featuring Emily Stevens and will release it in this territory early in January. A trade showing was held at Universal Film Company's projection room last week and excellent comments were heard on the picture. Gollos and Gollos expect to release a number of other interesting productions within the next few weeks.

Ben Beadell, when he opens his new office as Chicago manager for Stoll Film Corporation this week, will display one of the handsomest desk sets which ever graced a manager's office. The set was the parting gift of the employees who worked under him in his former office and was a token of their good will and love for their popular chief.

Chicago exhibitors are preparing to co-operate with the Chicago American in making that paper's annual "Go to Movie Week" a big success and are booking pictures and arranging special presentations which will make the period between Christmas and New Year a success from a box-office standpoint and bridge over the seven days which are generally considered a dull period.

Music and The Picture

The Complete Picture Production

A Talk to Producers

By Charles D. Isaacson

OUR editorial chief, who signs in bold strokes, "W. A. Johnston," on the first page of each week's NEWS, once made a very astonishing statement.

We were in conference in his inner sanctum sanctorum, with several important gentlemen; a certain production then before the field came up for discussion, when Mr. Johnston said:

"I tell you, that they could have added $75,000 to the value of that picture, if they had provided it with the right kind of music!"

Everybody gasped; I didn't, because I have long seen the light in that way, nevertheless I was delighted that the Chief had caught the fever and had analyzed the possibilities so accurately. Then and there I determined I should make the matter the subject of a special article in the music department, and here it is.

One will admit that a big feature is not complete, no matter how well it is made, until it has been provided with its musical atmosphere. Then how short-sighted it is, under examination, for a producer to spend a fortune in the taking of the scenes, in advertising the production, and then neglecting to add the finishing touches of the music.

I am reminded of former days when I was associated with the matter of national advertising. It was the fever at the time of everybody to rush into the Saturday Evening Post with pages and double pages, at five and ten thousand dollars a chance. Having the space the advertiser sat back and took a deep breath and objected to the proper making of drawings, engravings, type-setting to make that space look most attractive—he objected to the use of Brains to put into the space. What good were the two pages at ten thousand unless as much as was deemed wise was spent to make the advertising pull?

If a picture can be ruined by bad music, why should the producer take a chance on it? Is that good business? I would say that it is mightily short-sighted to send the big investment out on luck that it will be taken care of, in some way.

If a picture can be practically carried over by good music, why shouldn't the producer spend all that is deemed necessary to leave no stone unturned to provide the best music?

Making a big feature and then calling in any old individual for a quick glimpse at the advance screening, and being satisfied with a typewritten "cue-sheet" is the height of folly.

It should be thoroughly believed by now, that the money spent for the music must go on the production costs—not on the distribution. Moreover, in the appropriation for making a picture, sufficient leeway ought to be left for providing the music.

It should be considered that the money spent for the right music score is Picture Insurance.

It must tear the heart out of a director to walk into a theatre and hear a fifty-cent musical accompanniment to his five thousand dollar picture. It must make him think of a diamond set in brass—and the diamond looks like a piece of glass.

The question of Music Score for the Feature Picture is so important that it ought to engage the serious attention of every producer, director and star.

A bad picture can be glossed over and made to seem good with a wonderful musical score. A good picture can be kept up to its standard with the right kind of musical score.

Here is the way that the producer, the man who puts up the capital for the production, the author who writes it, the director who puts it out, the star whose acting and reputation are at stake, should think—We don't want to endanger our offering with a chance on the music."

I know that no serious producer would be so short-sighted that he would refuse to hire the right kind of actors at any price—the right kind of director—the right kind of scenic artist. Why skimp on the music?

Remember that you're not through with your picture until it is all complete, foolproof, self-starting and self-selling.

You spend a fortune on your advertising to the exhibitor and then give him a complete selling and advertising campaign. You won't take a chance on his failing to find the keynote in your publicity and exploitation appeal. How do you know he can find the keynote in the emotional appeal for the music?

The biggest feature successes, we all know, have been those which have been accompanied on tour by complete paraphernalia of score, and even the orchestra and singers and dancers!

But it isn't necessary to go that far.

The theatre man wants to know how to stage your feature, Mr. Producer. He has his orchestra, whether it be eighty-five pieces or less; he has his instruments. He is willing to make special arrangements for the picture to put it over right—he will engage extra musicians, singers, dancers—if he knows what to do with them.

Now, as I see it, the far-visioned, hard-headed producer will engage the best picture-composer he can find. Long before the picture is ready for release, he will put the composer to work. He will not say: "Compose me a complete score." But he will say: "Show me how to put that feature over musically." Then the composer will select the music of literature that fits best, and compose what doesn't fit. He will orchestrate it for the big-city first-run houses; he will then make several adaptations. He will scale it down to all size orchestras—and even to a piano score.

It will cost money—of course it will. But suppose it costs $20,000 to make the music right. And suppose only that much comes back on the music—(it is assumed that if necessary the scores could be sold at printing cost—although I would not recommend that)—isn't it good picture insurance?

The producer can say to his exhibitor: "This feature is ready for production. The picture is not only a winner, it has not only the most perfect exploitation angles—but we have made it all ready for your musical director. Not just a cue-sheet made by a hack, but a score specially adapted to this one picture—and in special arrangements to fit every size of house and orchestra. We have shown what special acts can go with it—what songs can be interpolated in it, what kind of a prologue is suitable, etc., etc."

Personally I would go further. I would engage musical directors to see the picture into the houses. I will tell you of my

Reed Picture Near Ready

Ziegfeld's First Feature, With Florence Reed, Soon to Be Cut

EXHIBITORS, producers and distributers are eagerly awaiting the first showing of W. K. Ziegfeld's initial screen offering, now being completed at the Peerless Studios in Fort Lee.

With a battery of four cameramen working day and night, Director Emile Chautard expects to put the finishing touches to the final scenes of W. K. Ziegfeld's initial screen offering the latter part of this week and begin cutting Monday or Tuesday. The picture is being made at the Peerless Studios in Fort Lee.

W. K. Ziegfeld's advent into the motion picture field created a stir in motion picture circles as the producer, who is known throughout the world as a theatrical manager and musical educator, declared that he would restrict himself as far as he possibly could to directors, actors and writers from the legitimate stage.

Closely following this announcement, word came that he had signed up Florence Reed, of "The Mirage" as the star for his first production. With this stellar light to open the way, Ziegfeld then scoured the field for a director with legitimate training and finally secured the services of Emile Chautard, who has directed a score of screen stars and previous to his entry into the screen world was director-general of the Theatre Rejane in Paris.

Adhering to his original intention of recruiting his associates from the field of the "legitimate," Ziegfeld then signed Philip Bartholomae author of "Very Good Eddie," "When Dreams Come True," and other plays, as scenario writer and followed this with contracts with such artists as Norman Trevor, now co-starring with Gilda Varesi in "Enter Madame"; Earle Foxe, who had just closed as a featured player in "Come Seven"; Tyrone Power, the tragedian who played the title role in "Chu Chin Chow"; Henry Stephenson, now playing a leading role in "Spanish Love" William Roselle, featured player in a score of Broadway hits; Paula Shay, a well-known Henry Savage player; Mlle. Dazie, former Follies and Winter Garden star, Earnest Lambart, and many others.

Although Ziegfeld has been in close communication with several of the larger distributing organizations, no definite releasing arrangements have yet been made for Ziegfeld Films.

Luporini Bros. Are Active

Well-Known Exporters Plan Big Publicity and Advertising Drive

PLANS for an extensive and far-reaching advertising and publicity campaign, to be conducted in the motion picture trade journals of an international nature, and designed to engender greater interest in the product of Luporini Brothers—exporters of American-made motion pictures, have been approved by Ferdinand Luporini, managing director of the company, according to an announcement issued to the trade press recently. A large appropriation has been set aside from which available funds will be drawn for the successful execution of the campaign, which it is said, will cover a wide territory.

For the work in question, the services of A. L. Feihman, advertising and publicity counsel, have been secured, and effective with the coming month, in consultation with Mr. Luporini, Mr. Feinman will henceforth plan and direct all advertising and publicity emanating from the Luporini offices.

The decision to start an advertising campaign the effects of which will be felt in almost every foreign territory in the world, is sufficient evidence with which to brand Luporini Brothers as a progressive export organization.

All advertising and publicity issued from the Luporini offices will be subject to approval by Ferdinand Luporini.

Esther Lindner Resigns From Levey Corp.

Esther Lindher, who has handled the publicity of the Harry Service Corporation since its organization, announces that she has resigned from that company to take effect immediately. Miss Lindner did excellent work in the publicity campaign on "Uncle Sam of Freedom Ridge." She will be succeeded by Miss Vivian Radcliffe.

Milton C. Work, president of the Peerless Feature Producing Company, announced yesterday that he had completed arrangements for the purchase of "Whispering Shadows," the latest Emil Chautard production for Mayflower.

The story of "Whispering Shadows" is based upon a play written by Walter Hackett. Lucy Cotton is the star. She has risen rapidly within the last year and has been the leading woman for George Arliss, William Faversham and Bert Lytell. Within a few days the Peerless Feature Producing Company will start an extensive advertising campaign in connection with this picture, which is to be distributed on the States Rights basis.

First Sale of Swain Comedies Reported

The initial step in the disposition of the state rights throughout the United States and Canada on the Perry Comedies, starring Mack Swain, has been announced by Walter J. Porges, president of Herald Productions, Incorporated. It will be remembered that these comedies consist of a series of twelve two-reel productions starring "the one and only Ambrose," of which three are ready for immediate release: "A Moonlight Knight," "See America First," and "Full of Spirit."

The New York rights on the entire series were bought for the Mentor Motion Picture Corporation by Syd Samson, manager. Porges states that the coming week will mark the closing of several other territories.

Frohman Rejects Offers of Distributing Organizations

ANNOUNCEMENT is forthcoming from the Frohman Amusement Corporation that the productions to be made by it and in which Miss Lillian Gish is to star will be distributed under franchises to be awarded independent buyers. This announcement, it is expected by Frohman will cause a radical change to be made with respect to the special productions to be made by other stars and is indicative of the trend which producers will follow.

William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, gave out the following statement at his offices in the Times Building:

"Since the first public announcement of our having contracted with Miss Lillian Gish, we have been in receipt of numerous inquiries from independent buyers and several of the national distributing organizations in an endeavor to learn of our plans of distribution. We have given the subject serious thought since that time, seeking only for that worldwide distribution which we believe the productions and Miss Gish's popularity and ability merit.

"We were flattered by the offers from two of the national distributing organizations, yet after thoroughly canvassing the situation, Miss Gish agreed with a suggestion that to independently exploit the productions would be a far better medium and pursuing a policy that must ultimately be followed in other cases where super-attractions are made. However, in the first instance we were somewhat diffident because of the possibility of our not being able to secure 100 per cent distribution in the United States through the medium of exchanges with whom we would care to do business—that is, exchanges so equipped as to properly exploit and handle these attractions caused us to hesitate. Our investigation then revealed that the independent or state right market was thoroughly established and that certain exchanges is individual territories were doing business on a profitable basis and along proper business lines. A survey of the first run houses in the United States convinced us that they are at all times prepared to book a worth while or super-attraction of independent release and to pay for it commensurate with its true box office worth.

"The productions we will make will number no less than four and no more than five during the year 1921, and the same number during the year 1922. We have surrounded Miss Gish with every convenience and every form of assistance that will leave nothing to be desired as far as human ability and intelligence can anticipate. The story of her first picture, to our mind, is unsurpassed for intensity of dramatic theme, depth of heart interest and general appeal. It was written by Madame "Fred" de Gresac.

"Jerome Storm, who is directing

Lillian Gish as she looks in her first production for Frohman Amusement Corp. This picture, directed by Jerome Storm, is to be sold on the independent market

Miss Gish in this initial production, of course, needs no introduction to either the trade or the motion picture going public. I have watched his work as far as we have gone and I realize why he is held in such high esteem by the profession and the public.

"The exploitation must be in keeping with the magnitude of the production itself, and we are mapping out a plan of exploitation that will continue week in and week out for the entire term of our contract with Miss Gish, which extends over the period of two years.

"I feel that the independent buyer will appreciate this opportunity to acquire productions as great and as big as any made by any other organization, whether a national distributor or otherwise.

"The various exhibitors' organizations of the United States passed resolutions urging support of the independent producer and the independent distributor pledged their cooperation, and I believe that both are sincere, and it is fundamentally because of that that I have prevailed upon Miss Gish to consent to this medium of distribution."

The first production, the working title of which is "World Shadows," but the releasing title of which has not been determined, will be ready for release about February 15th, 1921. The company has been actively engaged in production work at the Biograph studios in New York for upwards of six weeks.

Five franchises have already been awarded to state right buyers, but announcement of the exchanges acquiring the Lillian Gish productions will not be made until the entire United States has been disposed of.

Negotiations are pending for the disposal of the foreign rights of the production, two offers having already been cabled from London.

Dennis Neilson Terry in Stoll Production

Dennis Neilson Terry, who plays Lord Saltash in "The Hundredth Chance," a fascinating love and racing story evolved for the screen by Sinclair Hill from Ethel M. Dell's novel of the same name, is the son of Ellen Terry, one of the most famous women of the English speaking stage and Sir Henry Irving's co-star throughout his Lyceum theatre successes. Miss Terry made several tours of this country with Irving. "The Hundredth Chance" is to be released by the Stoll Corporation January 9.

Fourth Neal Hart Picture is "Totem Law"

"Totem Law" is the name selected for the fourth picture of the Neal Hart series, and it is said that portions of this picture will be filmed in San Antonio, Texas. The story is by W. C. Tuttle.

The Allens will handle the Jans production, "Madonnas and Men," for the Dominion of Canada. According to Mr. Jans, before leaving for Toronto, this fact does not interfere with the elaborate presentations already arranged, which will, with the full approval of the Allens, be given in Peterboro, Ottawa, Hamilton and London. These showings include a prologue which is proving to be a real sensation, as it includes the "Four Daring Diving Horses" and other novel features.

It was at the Allens suggestion that Mr. Jans retained the bookings laid out for the big picture in Driscoll's legitimate theatres.

Shallenberger Resigns from Federated

An announcement is made by W. E. Shallenberger of his resignation as general manager of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., to become effective December 15th.

Dr. Shallenberger stated that it was with extreme regret that he felt obliged to tender his resignation as general manager of Federated but that it was made necessary by the expansion of the Arrow Film Corporation of which he is president. He states that he finds that the increased activities of the Arrow will require all his time and attention and that he would not be able to do justice to Federated and the Arrow at the same time.

Dr. Shallenberger further stated that Federated were now in wonderful shape and that he considers their success is assured. He says that they have an organization perfectly welded together and that they have made remarkable strides. Business is prosperous in all of their branches and productions they are now handling are meeting with great success, and he considers the outlook very promising, in fact he believes Federated will be one of the strongest organizations of its kind ever formed and believes that they will take a leading place in the distributing end of the motion picture industry.

Ruby De Remer Prize Beauty

Artist Selects Star as America's Most Beautiful Woman

GREAT interest has been aroused in motion picture as well as in art circles over the announcement issued by M. Paul Helleu that he has, after a careful search, selected Miss Rubye De Remer as the most beautiful woman in America.

The selection was made by M. Helleu while Miss De Remer was enacting scenes for Arrow's production, "The Way Women Love." He visited the studio and watched Miss De Remer making some of the scenes, after which he asked her to pose for him for her portrait, and told her that he had selected her as being the exemplification of the beauty and charm of the typical American woman.

His announcement that he had chosen Miss De Remer for this honor created a furore in the daily press and magazines throughout the country and columns were devoted to articles dealing with her, her home and work, and pictures of her were used in conjunction with these articles which in many cases appeared on the front page.

The advertising and publicity department of the Arrow Film Corporation point out the tremendous value of this publicity to the exhibitors booking "The Way Women Love," the first production which she has just completed for Arrow and which will be released on December 15th. It affords, they claim, wonderful opportunity for advertising of an unusual nature and special advertising and publicity matter has been prepared by Arrow to be used in this connection.

Arrow announces that Miss De Remer has posed for a number of special and exclusive photographs to be used in exploiting "The Way Women Love" and state that they consider this publicity a very valuable asset to a man who books this picture.

Miss De Remer is one of the best known of American stage and screen actresses, having made her initial appearance as a member of the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic in 1917, when she was one of the sensations of the year, being called the reigning beauty of the Ziegfeld Frolic that year. From there she entered the ranks of screen players, where she has remained till the present date. Miss De Remer is a pronounced blonde, fair complexion and blue eyes. She was born in Denver, Col., and came to New York to study music. It was then that she was seen by Mr. Ziegfeld, and he was so impressed with her striking personality that he persuaded her to go on the stage. She made such a hit that she was sought after for motion picture work. Her success on the screen was greater than on the stage.

"The Way Women Love" is a special production made by Lyric Productions from the novel "Behind the Green Portieres," by Herman Landon, which first appeared in print in the Detective Stories Magazine. It was directed by Marcelle Perez and has a supporting cast headed by Walter Miller. Others having prominent parts in the picture are Rose Mintz, Henry W. Pemberton, Thomas A. Magrane, Edward Elkas, Walter D. Greene and Harry C. Young.

A special line of advertising accessories has been prepared and Arrow announces that every aid will be given the exhibitors in booking this picture which they feel will prove an exceptionally fine attraction for all exhibitors. Work on the second Rubye De Remer production, "Luxury," is well under way. An announcement will be made regarding same in the near future.

Buffalo Exchange Reports

"JUST recently," writes C. A. Taylor, general manager of Gardiner Pictures, Inc., of Buffalo, N. Y., "one of the motion picture magazines gave vent to the cry that the independent field was being crowded out of the first-run houses, making it rather hard for the independent productions to get dates.

"If what was said was based on the opinions of Independent Exchange Men, none such opinions came from our office, as Buffalo can be counted out of the list, as our big super features are easily placed in first-run houses.

"In the first place the biggest Independent Producer is D. W. Griffith, he has had no trouble in getting his worth-while productions such as "Way Down East' placed all over the country. Why? Because Griffith not only sells film, he sells production, he sells publicity, he sells music and mainly sells the Public.

"The only missing link with some of the average exchangemen is their sympathetic friendly ideas on selling their film. There is no time to waste friendship because you do not have the real features, they must have the real selling ideas to a theatre, then the public, backed with good service and different publicity ideas: these win.

"Our slogan is 'Service after the Contract' and we have had no trouble getting dates for worth-while productions such as 'The County Fair' 'Mickey' 'Before the White Man Came' and others. Of course I agree with you that some sections may be a little off but any independent exchanges that have worthwhile big features with big planned ideas to sell to the public, the big theatre will find open time for them.

"In conclusion some of the so-called independent producers are really near to a joke in putting on the market nice little seven fifty and ten dollar pictures with the vivid imagination that they are hundred dollar features ,and until they wake up, some independent exchanges will cry with distress.

"The day is past for bilking the exhibitor. There is room for real live independent exchanges all over the good old U. S. A."

Buffalo Showing for "Madonnas and Men"

"Madonnas and Men," the new Jans production which Ben Fitzer is distributing in New York state, was shown to a capacity audience of exhibitors, city officials, newspaper men and invited guests in the Buffalo Mark Strang theatre on Thursday evening, December 2. The entire Strand orchestra accompanied the presentation. Following the screening, Mr. Fitzer received congratulations on the excellence of the production and was offered several bookings right on the spot. Mr. Fitzer, however, is planning to present the production in one of the local legitimate theatres for an extended run at advanced prices.

On Tuesday evening, December 7, Mr. Fitzer took the picture to Syracuse, where in the Strand theatre he showed it to exhibitors in the vicinity of the college town. Mr. Fitzer declares that "Madonnas and Men" is going to be one of the biggest hits of the new year.

The lease is for a period of fifteen years and provides for an aggregate rental of approximately $500,000. The Criterion holds the Atlanta franchise of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Fifth Young Film Announced

"Hush" to Follow "Midchannel" on Equity Schedule

THE EQUITY PICTURES CORPORATION announces this week that the fifth Clara Kimball Young production, "Hush," consisting of six reels, is now ready for release. The author is Sada Cowen, also responsible for "Why Change Your Wife?" She was engaged exclusively for the Garson Productions two months ago, and immediately began work on "Hush," an original theme particularly constructed for Miss Young.

The cast, headed by Clara Kimball Young, who takes the role of the youthful Vera Stanford, wife of Jack Stanford, is supported by J. Frank Glendon, the leading man, Bertram Grassby, Kathlyn Williams, Jack Pratt, Gerard Alexander, Beatrice le Plante, and John Underhill. The production is directed by Harry Garson.

The release of "Hush" comes comparatively early, as only two months have elapsed since the release of Miss Young's fourth production, "Midchannel," which has just begun its successful career. The reason for the brief interval between both releases, according to Equity, is that the franchise-holders of the Young productions have requested as speedy a release of "Hush" as possible.

The usual wealth of beautiful gowns is said to be surpassed in variety and extravagance in "Hush." The interior sets and decorations are described as the height of magnificence, rivalling the indoor investitures of "Midchannel" in beauty. Among the many gorgeous spectacles in the story are a brilliant dining-room scene, an oriental fete, a fantastic artist's studio, a garden party, a seashore scene and a succession of moonlight landscapes.

The action of "Hush" is based on the question of absolute faithfulness of a married couple. As suggested by the significant title, the lesson of the story is that the past of a young married couple should be characterized by silence, lest some unfortunate incident be dug up which might be misconstrued by either and mar an otherwise happy future.

In this production Miss Young, it is claimed, rises to the zenith of her dramatic power, and depicts the inner suffering of a young wife, battling against her secret, with forceful effect. It enables the Equity star to display the endless variety of mood and emotion of which she is such a supreme master. It also affords Kathlyn Williams to reveal a sympathetic characterization as the friend of Vera and of Hugh Graham, the artist who is falsely suspected by Vera's husband.

The selection of the theme is considered to be eminently fit. Instead of chosing some story of bygone ages, Sada Cowen created this photo-drama of modern, American life, with situations that have arisen in the experience of most men and women. It is thought that this step showed excellent judgment, and will justify its wisdom by a most successful run throughout the country.

Big Publicity for World

Eight Page Supplement to Appear in 25,000 Papers Weekly in U. S.

ONE of the latest departures from the beaten path relative to publicity has been inaugurated by the World Motion Picture Corporation of 500 Fifth Ave., New York City. This is in the form of a News Illustration Supplement that will appear in over one thousand papers throughout the United States. The author of this weekly sheet is David Murphy, who is director of the Newspaper Service Department of this Corporation.

It is stated that the least amount of News Illustration Supplements that will be handled by any one paper will be 25,000 weekly. There will be one thousand newspapers handling this service. Thus it is expected that 25,000,000 readers each week will digest the entire contents of this supplement.

The initial copy of the World's News Illustration Supplement contains eight pages, five pages being devoted to topical news events, one page to up-to-date modes and fashions, one page to movie stars and a full page announcement of the World Motion Picture Corporation regarding some of its methods and several of its forthcoming stars.

In commenting upon this sheet, James B. Kelly, Managing Director of Sales of this Corporation, made the following statement: "Our News Illustration Sheet is simply one of a hundred up-to-date and progressive methods that will be used by this Corporation in bringing the public to a closer relationship with the most powerful medium of intelligent education to-day, namely, the moving picture screen. This is one of the methods that we will use in order to increase the box office receipts to the exhibitors throughout the country."

Credit on Screen for Cameraspondents

All cameraspondents of the World Motion Picture Corporation will receive full credit on the screen for all exceptional shots used in the World's News Pictures, the news-reel to be issued by the World. This is probably the first time any news-reel producing organization has accorded a news-cameraman such a privilege.

The announcement made this week by this company states that this will stimulate competition among the cameramen and will cause them to strive for remarkable and exceptional views of all events to which they are assigned. It will also acquaint the public with the cameramen who often risk their lives to obtain exclusive shots.

Tusun Comedy Dec. 20

The first of the Tusun comedies produced by Russell, Griever and Russell will be ready for release about Dec. 20. It is entitled "New Ralgia." Bobby Ray is featured in these single reelers.

Large Stage Built for Century Comedies

Word comes from the Coast that a big new stage has been constructed at the Hollywood plant of the Century Film Corporation, makers of Century Comedies, released by Universal. It is 125 feet long and 60 feet wide, and is connected to the lion arena by a system of runaways, making it available for the production of the "lion comedies" which have won the Century Company a well recognized place in the comedy field.

The new stage was constructed primarily so that the Los Angeles rainy season will not halt production work. The Century Company now is putting out one two-reel comedy reach week, in addition to more pretenious productions, at least one of which is always under way.

"Song of the Soul" Is in Heavy Demand

The first of the Messmore Kendall Productions, released through Goldwyn, "The Song of the Soul," from William J. Locke's story, "An Old World Romance," starring Vivian Martin, has been in heavy demand by exhibitors since its release a month or so ago, according to Goldwyn.

Miss Martin's second production under contract with Mr. Kendall and Robert W. Chambers is almost the exact antithesis of "The Song of the Soul," for it is a comedy which at times approaches the farcical. It was written by Edward Childs Carpenter and given the working title of "Polly," the name of Miss Martin's role. Sydney Olcott directed "Polly," which will soon be completed.

Big Business Reported on "The Furnace"

Exhibitors from all parts of the country are reporting big business on "The Furnace," the William D. Taylor special, according to reports from Realart. Among the exhibitors who wrote or wired their appreciation to the Realart home office, were L. W. Barclay, managing director of the Nemo theatre, of Johnstown, Pa., who stated that "it should pack any theatre with proper handling," and E. H. Gentle, manager of the Valentine theatre in Toledo, Ohio, who wrote that he believed it to be one of the best features he has ever played at his house.

"The Furnace" had its New York premiere on November 21 at the Rialto theatre, where Dr. Riensenfeld booked it for a week's run.

Saenger Company Books "The Tiger's Coat"

"The Tiger's Coat," the Dial Film Company's picturization of Elizabeth DeJean's story, which appeared both in novel form and as serial in the Pictorial Review, has been booked by the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans, La., for their circuit. The production will open at the Trianon Theatre, New Orleans, the first week of December.

Leonhardt Finishes Picture

Completes "The Devil" in Association with Andrew J. Callaghan

AFTER a career of thirty years in all branches of showmanship, Harry Leonhardt, the builder of the California theatre of Los Angeles, has completed his first motion picture as an independent producer.

His first picture, made in association with Andrew J. Callaghan is "The Devil," featuring George Arliss, and according to executives of The Associated Exhibitors, Inc., the production bears every evidence of the long box office experience of Mr. Leonhardt. It is confidently predicted by Associated Exhibitors officials that it will rank with the really big successes of the screen.

"The Devil" is but the first production of Leonhardt & Callaghan, and it is stated that it is the beginning of a comprehensive production program outlined for the coming year.

"I have talked to exhibitors from California to New York City," Mr. Leonhardt said when interviewed upon his arrival from the Coast, "and they are all of one mind. They believe they have been carrying the burden of a tremendous and unnecessary overhead in production. They believe they have been carrying the burden of too much financing, of too much promotion, and too little actual production. They also believe they have been paying for a lack of cooperation between the box office and the studio, and they are ready to welcome into the field of production those men who have had long and successful experience in the theatre, in the actual selling of pictures to the public."

The picture will be distributed by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., in accordance with the selection of that organization by The Associated Exhibitors.

Sunrise Campaign Started

Teasers Will Attract Attention to New Peggy Hyland Production

THE first stunt in a nation-wide teaser campaign in connection with the forthcoming release of Peggy Hyland in "The Price of Silence" by the Sunrise Pictures Corporation, No. 220 West 42nd Street, was completed yesterday when more than 10,000 post cards pictures of Peggy Hyland was sent broadcast to state right buyer and exhibitor alike. The card merely contained a few teaser lines, the name of the star and picture, and no mention was made of the distributing company about to release this super-independent special. Beginning this week, some of the teaser ads which exhibitors will be urged to use later on, will appear in the trade papers.

Many inquiries from state right buyers and exhibitors have come in to General Manager Winfield F. Kelley during the week following the announcement to the trade of the acquisition of a new Peggy Hyland feature. The picture is still in the laboratory and will be shown to state right buyers next week.

An announcement from Nat Dorfman, publicity director, states that a novel lobby display and a series of oil paintings will add to the already large list of accessories.

President Carnot announced yesterday that Alfred Timen was made treasurer of the company, and I. Oppenheim, secretary.

New Concern Tells Plans

Associated Photoplays Announces Picture; to Have New York Office

THE first announcement of the release of features through the recently organized Associated Photoplays, Inc., is announced this week from the Los Angeles office by Manager Victor B. Fisher. The first release will be a six-reel western subject, titled "No Man's Woman," starring Helen Gibson, formerly featured in Universal western subjects after a long engagement with the Kalen Company, where she played the name part in a series of railroad melodramas, "The Hazards of Helen." Miss Gibson also made a number of western subjects for the Capitol Film Company. The coming production will have a cast of well-known players supported by western men of actual experience in the cattle country.

Another production nearing completion is being made by Berwilla Film Corp., and features Neva Gerber and Ben Wilson. This is said to be founded on a stirring theme with a strong punch in which humor, pathos, and the much sought-after faith interest are skillfully interwoven.

Elaborate preparations are under way toward organization of the New York executive offices upon the arrival there of Samuel H. London, general manager of the Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., following his transcontinental trip, on which he interviewed the corporation's franchise holders and outlined its plans and program.

The Production Department, under the supervision of John L. Dewey, is in full operation, and it is expected will be working to capacity within a few days.

Federated Announces Shortest Statement

"In this day and age of long and often verbose statements," states Federated, "issued indiscriminately by executive and department heads of various producing and distributing organizations, it is a relief to say and a pleasure to record what is probably the shortest statement of a motion picture executive on record."

The executive referred to is W. G. Underwood, of the Specialty Film Company, Dallas, Texas, who has recently acquired membership in the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Incorporated, arranging to distribute Federated products in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. "The reason I became a member of the Federated Exchanges," said Mr. Underwood, "is that a careful survey of the industry proved that Federated offers the independent exchangeman the greatest opportunity to make money in the business."

"The DoubleAdventure" Is Now Complete

"The Double Adventure," the fifteen episode serial starring Charles Hutchison, has been completed in every detail, according to recent report from the House of Serials. The picture was directed by W. S. Van Dyke and produced by Robert Brunton. It is on the Pathe serial list for 1921.

Opens Big House with "The Furnace"

John Hamrick will open his new 1,250-seat motion picture theatre in Seattle on December 22, with Realart's William D. Taylor special, "The Furnace." The theatre is the Blue Mouse and is described by Realart to be one of the largest in the Pacific Northwest.

Gordon H. Standing in Barrie Playlet

Gordon H. Standing, who plays a prominent part in "The Foreigner," the Ralph Connor story, and many other screen successes, has temporarily forsaken the silent drama to play a part on the speaking stage in a Barrie playlet, called "Half an Hour."

Some of his most recent screen successes in addition to "The Foreigner" are "Man and Woman" and "Miss 139" both of which will be released by the Sherman Productions Corporation.

Rothacker Pictures to Teach Freight Packing

The Rothacker Film Company announces that it is to produce two pictures for the New York Central lines to combat the faulty packing of freight which resulted in the loss of one hundred million last year. One film will show the proper way to pack goods of all descriptions and the other will visualize the correct way for railway employees to handle goods while in shipment. The New York Central plans to give wide circulation to both films.

Depression Fears Are Caused by Extravagant Producers

By J. J. Schnitzer, President of Equity Pictures

WILL you permit me to venture an opinion on the subject of the future that apparently "threatens" our industry. Several members of the motion-picture field whose word carries the weight of experience have hastened to sound the alarm of "Danger Ahead." They have, consciously or unconsciously, uncovered a hornet's nest of panic and bugaboo, so that it has now become the order of the day for one-half of the industry to set up a woeful wail about the black and bleak outlook and the other half to soothe the howling chorus with assurances that things are not what they seem and that the dark clouds will soon clear off.

Anyone witnessing the anxiety that has suddenly gripped us as to fate of business that occurred in an East Side theatre some weeks ago when some brainless being shouted "Fire!" when there was only chimney smoke, and caused a stampede in which nine children lost their lives. Some "penny-wise and pound-foolish" exhibitors whose business has lately been dull for the obvious reason that their pictures were poor proceeded to cry "Wolf!" when not even a puppy dog was in sight, and infected their brethren with their own nervousness. The effect has been a stampede from fear to folly.

Our attention, however, is chiefly directed to the leaders in the field who handle a really worthy product and who, nevertheless, see bad times ahead of us. It is this group, to whom the rest look for guidance and who give the cue to the fold who must first be answered.

If the vanguard of the industry is to throw up its hands in holy horror before the ghost of fear, then a general confusion throughout the field is to be expected. When a regiment is routed it is not the private but the officers who are responsible. If pandemonium becomes rampant in the film field it will be the fault of the men at its head. An exhibitor here or there warning the world at large of an unseen foe is not as significant or as authoritative as a commanding figure beating a retreat.

It is easy for those who know from past experience that apprehension for the future is groundless, to laugh off these fears and ascribe the panicky sentiments of those who see red, to mental illusion. But this would not relieve the situation, for it is a well known psychological fact that if men believe a lie, it becomes the truth for them. It is therefore the duty of conscientious members of our industry to treat the disturbance seriously before it gains headway. Overlooking a disease will not remove it.

The fact is, as those who remember war-times well know, that the amusement field is the last to feel an economy wave, and, as pointed out in Mr. Johnstone's editorial in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS of some weeks ago, that the film business may even gain from the loss sustained by other interests. Motion-pictures, being the cheapest form of amusement and recreation, will certainly cut least into the public purse. If attendance at legitimate shows should fall, which is highly improbable if we are to believe our eyes, then motion-picture patronage will, if anything, be the beneficiary.

There is, to my mind, still another root underlying the fears of our prominent producer-distributors as to the oncoming situation. Having indulged their taste for "lavish" productions, the big producers are becoming anxious over their investment. With hundreds of thousands of dollars already sunk into some super-special, news of frugality in the exhibitor market is very discouraging. It has been hard enough in normal times for producers to realize what they have spent, and something besides, on an expensive picture. They are, therefore, somewhat shaky about their chances of recovering their huge outlay on a costly feature. The announcement of the release of another "million-dollar" production nowadays is no longer sweet music to an exhibitor's ears, for it means that he will have to stand part of that expenditure by high rentals. I do not blame these producers for their nervousness about the future, but I certainly do criticize them for laying the blame on "general business conditions," instead of their own extravagance.

This period of tension should constitute a timely warning for sponsors of "luxurious" productions to be heeded in normal times as well. Just as a tenant hurries to take an insurance policy when his neighbor's house is on fire, so should our ambitious producers take their lesson from the troubles—as imaginary as they may be—in other quarters. To me it has always been a puzzle why a picture must have sumptuous background to be a success. There are plays built around a setting of poverty that have scored as big hits as those laid in extravagance. Propagators of pompous productions might as well make a virtue of necessity for economy in expenditure by making their action internal, instead of external, and confine their scenes to the regions of the sentiment, rather than outdoor spectacle. The man who now comes forth with "the costliest" picture ever made is looked upon more as an enemy than a friend.

Because the large program-producers have made the "panic" worse by releasing expensive pictures, the exhibitors are turning to the independent producers for relief. The independent, enjoying a small overhead expense and marketing pictures at moderate terms, is coming into his own.

Only by curtailment of production-cost and by facing facts, not fancy, will any unrest in the motion picture industry be avoided. If, instead of expressing our fears, we should express our hopes, the future would assume its normal color. The widespread building and expansion of theatres now going forward vigorously should in itself give the lie to any doubts of prosperity. The moment we are afraid of the future, the future will automatically become dark for us.

Billy Rhodes Comedies for Special Pictures

Announcement has been made by Max Roth, eastern district manager for Special Pictures Corporation, to the effect that Billie Rhodes, well known comedy star, recently signed a contract to produce twenty-six comedies during the coming year for Special Pictures Corporation.

These comedies will be released one every other week; through Special Pictures Corporation, beginning at an early date.

Foreign Conditions Improved, Says Hammond

Guy R. Hammond, manager of the foreign department of the Arrow Film Corporation, in a statement issued this week, says that so far as their experience goes the foreign market is in an extremely healthy condition and this in spite of the fact that an undoubted handicap exists, due to the extremely poor rate of exchange now existing in the various foreign countries.

He states that general conditions abroad are improving and says that they are in receipt of advice from their London and Paris offices to this fact.

Sherman Sees Banner Year

Discounts Talk of Bad Business and Expects Rise of Independents

WITH practically all territory allotted in the United States and Canada Harry A. Sherman, president of Sherman Productions Corporation, looks forward to 1921 as a banner year in the independent field.

In discussing his plans for the coming season, Mr. Sherman said: "I am looking forward to 1921 to be the banner year, not only for Sherman Productions Corporation, but also for the entire independent field.

"The wonderful response that I have received from the leading exchange men all over the country and the great interest they have shown in the proposition and its possibilities are most gratifying. I am convinced that the independents are going to come into their own during the coming year in a fashion never before believed possible.

"Right now we are passing through a period when there is talk of 'bad business,' 'slump,' 'over production,' and so on. The calamity howler is on deck as usual.

"But a little investigation will show that most of those who are going around with a gloom-brush laying it on thick over conditions in the independent market have got pictures for which they have been trying to get prices out of all proportion to the picture's value.

"There are plenty of productions on the market, so that the independent distributor can exercise a choice and, of course, he is doing it at the expense of the poor picture. But there is no trouble in marketing a production that has real attraction value.

"In my opinion 1921 is going to be a year in which all the many and great possibilities for mutual co-operation and advantage between the independent producer, distributor and exhibitor will be realized and developed in a degree never before possible. Producing costs will be stabilized and fairly and evenly distributed and the quality of productions standardized and maintained at a consistently high point."

Buyers Are Shown New Hallroom Series

The first three releases of the series of Hallroom Boys Comedies were given a special premiere showing on Tuesday to twenty exhibitors of New York and prominent State Rights' buyers by Jack Cohn of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York.

Mr. Cohn announces that something new in comedy exploitation is provided for this new series of Hallroom Boys comedies in regular campaign sheets similar to the big features with posters and special exploitation aids.

Another innovation in the production of the new series of Hallroom Boys comedies is what may be termed duplex directing. With a two-reel comedy to be turned out every two weeks, two directors are constantly employed. While one is shooting on a picture, the other is free to plan his own next picture.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Reports from Fox Film officials show that the bookings on the new serial "Fantomas" are greater at the present time than those of the first serial, "Bride 13." Furthermore, the bookings show that over 95 per cent of the exhibitors who booked "Bride 13," — which is still being shown throughout the country—have also signed contracts for the showing of "Fantomas." This serial will be released immediately after the finishing episodes of "Bride 13." "Fantomas" looks to the Fox organization like a 100 per cent booking serial.

"Bride 13" has made the sale of "Fantomas" easy for the Fox branch managers and salesmen, declares William Fox. So satisfied have exhibitors been that they have wired or written to Mr. Fox complimenting him on the pulling power of the serial and declaring it to be, in their judgment, the best they have ever shown.

Special Cast Assembled

Fine Support Assured Marguerite Clark in "Scrambled Wives"

DIRECTOR E. H. GRIFFITH announces an exceptionally strong cast to support Miss Marguerite Clark in the comedy "Scrambled Wives," her first independent production which is to be released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. There are at least two actresses in the cast who have appeared as stars in their own right, and nearly every actor and actress has had important parts on the screen or the stage, which have made them known to the theatre-going public.

Florence Evelyn Martin, who plays Bessie Carlton, is a well known leading woman on the legitimate stage, and recently appeared as co-star with Guy Empey in the film success, "The Undercurrent."

Virginia Lee, a Southern girl, who has played in such productions as "The Fortune Teller" with Marjorie Rambeau; as co-star with Emmett Dalton in "Beyond the Law;" as the star of "Love or Money;" and in "If Women Only Knew," the recently completed production of J. N. Naulty and Gardner Hunting, plays the part of Beatrice Harlow.

Leon Gendron, who plays the leading role opposite Miss Clark, has had a swift rise to screen fame. His first appearance was made only a few months ago when he played with Madge Kennedy in "The Girl With the Jazz Heart." More recently he had an important part in "If Women Only Knew."

The part of John Chiverick is in the hands of Ralph Bunker, who was originally cast for this part in the stage production and who has a record of successes as a comedian both on the legitimate stage and on the screen.

Alice Mann, who has the part of Connie Chiverick, has been featured in such popular screen comedies as "Fatty at Coney Island" (with Roscoe Arbuckle); and America Cheddister, who plays Mrs. Halsey, is a recent recruit from the stage.

Other parts are in the hands of Frank Badgley, John Mayer, John Washburn, Thomas A. Braidon, Harry Fisher, Wesley Jenkins, Ada Neville and Emma Wilcox.

Predicts Big Welcome for "East Lynne"

That "East Lynne," the production which Hugo Ballin is now engaged in making for Hodkinson release, will meet with an enthusiastic response is the contention of S. A. Arnold, Hodkinson representative in the Little Rock territory. Mr. Arnold writes the Hodkinson home-office as follows:

"I want to take this opportunity to tell you that the next Hugo Ballin picture must certainly prove a winner, for even now, months in advance of this release date, I have been swamped with inquiries from different exhibitors concerning it."

Meighan Goes West to Finish "The Quarry"

Thomas Meighan is commuting to Hollywood again. This time to finish his latest Paramount picture, "The Quarry." This is the fourth time in a year that Mr. Meighan has traveled between New York and Hollywood for picture making. "The Frontier of the Stars" and "Civilian Clothes" he made in the east, and "Conrad in Quest of His Youth" and "Why Change Your Wife?" were produced on the West Coast. For the latter picture Mr. Meighan jumped to the Pennsylvania station, New York, for several scenes.

Hodkinson Pictures Get First-Run Bookings

Word has been received at the home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that W. O. Edmunds, Hodkinson representative at San Francisco, has sold the "The U. P. Trail" and "The Brute Master" for first run showings at Goddard's theatre (C. W. Goddard, owner). "The U. P. Trail" is a Benjamin B. Hampton production with an all-star cast made from Zane Grey's novel. "The Brute Master" is a J. Parker Read, Jr., production, a stirring sea story, in which Mr. Bosworth has the central role, supported by Anna Q. Nilsson and a strong cast.

Wallace Worsley has renewed his contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to direct the production of feature pictures. His direction of Goldwyn's production of "The Penalty," from Gouverneur Morris' novel of the same name, was one of the distinct directorial achievements of the year, in the opinion of Goldwyn officials. Since finishing that photoplay he has directed Madge Kennedy's latest picture for Goldwyn, "The Highest Bidder," from Maximilian Foster's novel, "The Trap," and is now wielding the megaphone for Gertrude Atherton's first story written directly for the screen, tentatively known as "Noblesse Oblige."

In contradiction of a recent story published in a popular magazine, Alvin Wyckoff, director of photography at the Lasky studio, rises to remark that he and Howard Ewing, former chief electrician with Cecil B. DeMille's company, were the first ones to perfect and use the tiny arclight for use in a picture wherein a character lights a match to touch to his cigarette or cigar. This was first used years ago by Elliott Dexter in "A Romance of the Redwoods," asserts the Paramount expert.

Metro to Produce Real California Story

A real California story, with a natural California background, furnished the theme and setting for the forthcoming all-star picturization of "What Is the Matter with Marriage?," based on Jack London's novel, "The Little Lady of the Big House," which will be produced at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood. The story, replete with action, deals with typical California ranch life among the immensely wealthy land owners.

Report Heavy Booking for Pioneer Releasse

"Thoughtless Women," Daniel Carson Goodman's production, starring Alma Rubens, which is now being released by the Pioneer Film Corporation, promises to receive a larger number of bookings than any feature on the Pioneer list this year, according to word from the Pioneer headquarters. The advance bookings are said to be far in excess of any previous feature.

Geraldine Bonner Aids in Adapting Play

Coincidental with the news from Los Angeles that "Sham" by Elmer Harris and Geraldine Bonner has been purchased for screening as a Paramount Picture, comes word that Mrs. Bonner has arrived on the Coast to assist Mr. Harris in preparing their play in its new form.

"Sham" was a big stage success of some years ago, Henrietta Crossman being the star in the East and Florence Roberts in the West. No word is yet forthcoming as to the players to be used in the screen version.

Observe Goldwyn Week in Philadelphia

The first week in December was Goldwyn week in Philadelphia, three productions from the Goldwyn studios receiving week runs. The Stanton theatre, formerly the Stanley, screened "Madame X," based upon Alexandre Bisson's play, with Pauline Frederick in the leading role.

At the Palace theatre, Will Rogers in "Honest Hutch," was the attraction, while the Victoria showed Gertrude Atherton's "Out of the Storm," based upon her novel, "The Tower of Ivory." The three productions played to remarkable business, it is stated.

Reports "Sex" as Scoring in Small Towns

Even in the small towns throughout the United States "Sex" continues to draw the crowds, states W. W. Hodkinson. The Temple theatre, Aberdeen, Miss., ran the picture two days to great houses and "cleaned up" with it, it is stated. The Rose theatre, Indianola, Miss., ran it two days with the same result, according to a statement from the Hodkinson headquarters.

Special Attention Is Given to Draperies

Under the direction of Al Meyer, the drapery department has grown to be a very important part of the machinery in the new Long Island studio. The department has been equipped with modern machinery of all kinds—button machines, hair-picking machines, and electric sewing machines. The hangings, draperies, table covers and runners for all interiors are originated in the art and decoration department and then manufactured in the drapery department.

Metro Releases for December

METRO announces for December release three picture specials, one of them an all-star production, the second starring the versatile Bert Lytell, and the third with Viola Dana in the stellar role. The release of these three pictures at this time is peculiarly appropriate, says Metro, for all of them are thoroughly imbued with the spirit of geniality and good cheer that is a feature of the Yuletide season. They are described as having all the glow of warm sentiment, delicious humor and adventure that will carry an appeal and thrill to all that behold them on the screen.

That these December releases are all out of the ordinary and in keeping with the noteworthy standards of Metro pictures, is attested ed by the fact that two are picturizations of plays that have been tried and tested in the crucible of popularity on the stage, and that one is an adaptation from an original story by Luther Reed, the prominent young playwright and scenarioist.

The First of these is "Hearts Are Trumps," to be released on December 13, with an all-star cast. It is a picturization of the great stage melodrama by Cecil Raleigh. The story is of a girl who is the stake at a game of cards, and of the feud of vengeance that bears fruit twenty years later, with an innocent daughter as the victim of two men's hate. The action begins in old England, veers to Alaska, swings back to England, and comes to a climax in the snow-clad mountains of Switzerland.

The all-star cast included such widely known players as Frank Brownlee, Alice Terry, Francelia Billington, Joseph Kilgour, Winter Hall, Brinsley Shaw, Thomas Jefferson, Norman Kennedy, Edward Connelly, Bull Montana and Howard Crampton. The melodrama was adapted to the screen by June Mathis, and was directed by Rex Ingram.

"The Misleading Lady," starring Bert Lyrell, is slated for release on December 20. This special production was adapted from the play by Charles Goddard and Paul Dickey. In this picturization Mr. Lytell again displays that exceptional versatility which has earned him a high niche in screendom. In this production he enacts the dashing role of Jack Craigen, the woman-hater, whose pride is rankled by a woman who made sport of him, and whom he completely subjugates by a course in rough treatment.

Lucy Cotton plays opposite the star as the society girl who proves her histrionic ability by making a man propose to her and then is conquered by true love. The other supporting members are Frank Currier, Stephen Grattan, Rae Allen, Cyril Chadwick, Barnet Parker and Arthur Hausman.

On December 27 "Cinderella's Twin" will be released. This original story, both written and scenarioized by the popular fictionist, Luther Reed, is a sparkling comedy which for interest outdoes the fairy story that engrossed so many in childhood days. It is the Cinderella motif with a modern twist. In this picture Viola Dana has a superb vehicle in which to star. For her supporting cast Miss Dana has Wallace MacDonald, Ruth Stonehouse, Cecil Foster, Edward Connelly, Victory Bateman, Gertrude Short, Irene Hunt, Edward Cecil and Calvert Carter.

Bruce Scenics in Fifty Houses

ACCORDING to a statement from Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., more than fifty of the principal first run theatres of the country in the same number of theatres last week gave a portion of their bill to Bruce Scenics Beautiful. This occurred without any special effort, excepting a general sales drive being put forward for that result.

"This," says Educational, "represents a new record in the short subject field and is the best possible proof of the growing popularity of these pictures. In most cases these pictures have been mentioned in the newspaper advertising and almost without exception have they been given special musical settings, on many occasions serving as prologues for features or being shown in connection with special vocal numbers or dances."

"The growth of the use of scenics such as the Bruce pictures and the attention given their presentation has been one of the striking developments of the year," according to E. W. Hammons, president of Educational. "I believe that another twelve months will see every manager in the country who is really running his house to please his patrons and who is building business for the future using a carefully selected single reel scenic or some special picture of the sort with every bill.

"The great trouble with these pictures has been the same that has prevailed in every other class of pictures—the unwillingness to put them on a quality basis. I would never ask a salesman of ours to sell one of these pictures merely to supply length on a program. I want every exhibitor to show these pictures because they mean something to his theatre, because I know that if they attempt to produce this result they will soon be bringing new patronage to their houses because of these pictures. That is best proven by the fact that ninety-eight per cent of the theatres that showed Bruce pictures four or five years ago are still taking every release—and this applies from the Rialto and Rivoli on Broadway straight through the country.

"And as much as these pictures mean to the biggest houses, they are of even more value to the neighborhood theatre and the small city house where the manager wants to establish his entertainment as the best. We long ago practically exhausted these pictures for first run bookings; the past year has shown that the demand is spreading to the smallest hamlet. I predict that before many months have passed the quality scenic pictures will be regarded as important to the theatre as the feature itself."

Plans of Dustin Farnum

Intends Making a Series of Super Specials with Own Company; Finishes His Contract

PLANS for the production of a series of super-features have been completed by Dustin Farnum, who stopped over in Chicago for two days last week, en route from New York to his headquarters in Los Angeles. Mr. Farnum, who was accompanied by his director, Ernest Ward, stated that he has finished the pictures called for under his contract with Robertson-Cole and will now go ahead producing for himself, individually financing his own productions.

Mr. Farnum said that this is the first opportunity he has had to select his own stories and he believes that the resulting pictures will be powerful and interesting screen dramas as the stories are especially adapted to his needs. ,

He already has purchased two novels from Ridgwell Cullum, who is widely known as an author, among his most famous novels being "The Way of the Strong," "The Triumph of John Kars," "The Sheriff of Dyke Hole," "The Trail of the Axe," and "The Compact," the last two being the novels purchased by Mr. Farnum for immediate production.

Mr Farnum, before his recent trip to the East, had completed most of the outdoor portions of "The Trail of the Axe," going into the heart of the Rockies to do the work, and obtaining what he states are some of the most magnificent scenic settings ever used in a picture. On his return to Los Angeles he will complete "The Trail of the Axe" and prepare for the production of "The Compact," which will be the second in his proposed series of features.

All of the pictures planned will give him an opportunity to play the part of the virile outdoor man and will be replete with strong situations and incidents which will appeal particularly to the moving-picture public which he believes is beginning to tire of the so-called drawing-room drama.

Mr. Farnum did not disclose his distribution plans, but he was constantly with Harry Sherman of Harry Sherman Productions, Inc., while in Chicago, and there is basis for the belief that Sherman Productions will handle the forthcoming Dustin Farnum pictures.

Woody Sees Producing Field Winning Best in Brains and Talent

"THERE'S no question about it —motion picture production is drawing to it the very best in talent and brains." This statement, according to J. S. Woody, Realart's general manager, sums up one of the reasons for the industry's progress and particularly Realart's growth and success.

"Naturally, I have always realized that motion pictures are demanding, in their production, the highest type of men and women," said Mr. Woody, "and this realization has been strengthened by a consideration of the educational qualifications of some of Realart's employees in its West Coast studios. In looking over our records I was particularly impressed by the fact that an astonishing number are college graduates. Not only department heads, who are men and women of exceptional training, but workers in all departments of our organization are, I noted, of the same fine type.

"I am mighty proud of this showing. It indicates the high point to which motion pictures have developed and, more particularly, the unusually fine class of people who have been attracted by the business ideals of Realart Pictures Corporation."

The man who stops learning stops applying; the man who stops applying stops winning; the man who stops winning might as well be dead.

Daisy Robinson Leads in Willat Picture

Irvin V. Willat's second independent production, for Hodkinson release, "Partners of the Tide," is well under way. Mr. Willat's new leading woman is Miss Daisy Robinson, described by Hodkinson to be a singularly beautiful ingenue. Miss Robinson played with Maude Adams in "Peter Pan" and "Quality Street." She also played in "Ben Hur" and was the blind girl in "The Cricket on the Hearth."

Other members of the cast include Jack Perrin, Gordon Mullen, J. P. Lockney, Joe Miller, Bert Hadley and Ashley Cooper.

George Bunny, son of the late John Bunny, is now making a series of two-reel Capital Comedies for the National Film Corporation of America. These George Bunny comedies will be released through Goldwyn as have the previous Capital Comedies.

The first of these two-reel comedies by the younger Bunny, for release through Goldwyn, is "At It Again," said to be a mirth-provoking funalogue from start to finish.

Eddie Polo Will Film in Cuba

Company in Havana Ready to Begin Next Serial

EDDIE Polo's next serial will be filmed in Cuba and other West Indian islands, it is announced by Universal. Polo and a large company are already in Havana, having arrived there from Los Angeles December 4. The tentative title for the new Polo thriller is "The Seal of Satan." It will be in eighteen episodes and will take from three to four months to film, during which time the entire company will remain in the Antilles.

Decision to film an episode-picture in Latin American surroundings was made after considerable pressure had been brought to bear upon Universal officials by West Indian, South and Central American exhibitors, in whose houses Eddie Polo is a prime favorite, say Universal officials. Although the serial will have as back-ground some of the most historical and picturesque spots of Cuba and its neighbors, the story and principal characters of the photo-drama will be American and the plot will have to do with events of particular interest to citizens of the United States.

J. P. McGowan, veteran Universal serial director, will have charge of the serial, although Polo himself has much to say about the production of his chapter-pictures. McGowan was selected by Universal officials because of his success with Polo's previous serial "King of the Circus," the last episode of which was filmed less than a month ago, and which is making records as the best serial ever released by Universal.

As in his previous serials, "King of the Circus" and "The Vanishing Dagger," Polo will not be satisfied with one leading lady for "The Seal of Satan," but will have two. In "The Seal of Satan" he will have Inez McDonald and Magda Lane.

Anthony W. Coldewey is the author of "The Seal of Satan." It was Coldewey who put Eddie Polo's life history into script form for "King of the Circus." Coldewey is in Cuba with the company and will change and improve the plot of the story as opportunities are offered to use certain localities for settings.

Already thrilling incidents have been prepared for action in such well-known localities as Morro Castle, San Juan Hill, P. R., the harbor of Santiago de Cuba and other spots equally inspiring to the American mind. In other episodes there will be shown lively fights in the old coves and other places made famous by Morgan and other buccaneers of history.

The company will return to Universal City by way of the Panama Canal, where several episodes will be filmed in the various interest points in the Zone.

J. Marchant, of the Universal directorial staff, will assist McGowan in the production of "The Seal of Satan." Cecil Myers, and Jean Perkins are the two cameramen with the expedition. C. Roberts is the technical director and David Brandman is business manager of the company.

In starting on this serial so soon after completing "King of the Circus," Polo has broken a precedent in serial production at Universal City. The extra time necessary for traveling around the West Indies made it necessary to start at once in order that the serial might be released early in 1921.

Polo had planned upon a trip to Atlanta, Ga., for the week of December 6 to 11. He had been invited as a special guest of Atlanta exhibitors and serial fans during the Moving Picture Exposition held there. A special Eddie Polo night had been planned for the closing night of the exposition, and Polo counted upon being present. It developed, however, that Polo's presence in Atlanta would delay the serial for several weeks and probably would delay its release, set for January 31. A long series of personal appearance has been arranged for Polo and his company in Cuba where his serials are said to be moneygetters always.

Fox Units Keep Busy in West

Home-Office Preparing Aids for the New Features

QUITE apart from the number of special productions William Fox is making for distribution in the early months of 1921 announcement of several offerings in which his stars will be presented in their regular series and sequence, comes from the Fox studios in Hollywood. William Russell, Eileen Percy, Shirley Mason, Louise Lovely, Buck Jones and Tom Mix are the stars concerned in the present references.

While no release date is set for any of the offerings now in work out West, advance preparations are under way at the home office in New York to equip picture showmen with aids to exploitation. More full and complete details will be provided in ample time to give exhibitors opportunity to cash in on the various plays as they come along on regular schedule.

Work on "Brute McGuire," a story by A. Channing Edington, in which William Russell will star, was begun November 4. James Patrick Hogan prepared the scenario, George Schniedermann is the cameraman and Mr. Hogan is directing from his own script. Mary Thurman will be Mr. Russell's leading woman in "Brute McGuire" and George Fisher will be the leading heavy.

"The Cheater Reformed" is the exhibition title adopted for Jules G. Furthman's story hitherto referred to as "The Cloth of Gold." Scott Dunlap directed William Russell in this presentation, an offering that is now passing through its final grooming for release.

Eileen Percy will be the star of "Why Trust Your Husband," a feature that is finishing preparation for release. George Marshall, who directed, also figured in the preparation of the story, with Paul Gazeneuvet sharing that credit. "Why Trust Your Husband" was decided upon as substitute for the preliminary caption, "Nobody Home."

Miss Percy started work November 29 on a story written and scenarized by Jules G. Furthman, who is serving also in a third capacity as director of the presentation. Herbert Heyes is playing opposite Miss Percy in "On Her Wedding Night."

Tom Mix is jumping all over Southern California while he creates thrills and makes scenes for use in "Oh, You Tex!" a work he undertook December 1 under the direction of George E. Marshall. The author of the story is William McLeod Raine, the scenarist is Frank Howard Clark and the cameraman is Ben Kline.

Buck Jones started in the middle of November to film his skill in a story written by Jules G. Furthman, now titled "Fighting Back." Jack Ford is directing, with Edward Feeny as his assistant and Fran Good as cameraman.

Louise Lovely is to be screened in "The Unbelievers," a work started November 27 under the direction of George William Hill, who takes charge of Miss Lovely's future presentations. Mr. Hill also furnishes the story and scenario. His assistant director is Arthur Delmore and Friend F. Bajer is the cameraman.

Christie Comedy Two Weeks on Broadway

For the second time in as many weeks the Rialto theatre is this week showing a two-reel comedy released through Educational Exchanges. This is "A Homespun Hero," a Christie in which Bobby Vernon is featured, supported by Helen Darling and Vera Steadman. It showed the preceding week at the Rivoli.

Last week at the Rialto was "A Tray Full of Trouble," a Chester Comedy which had played the week before at the Rivoli.

Every two-reel Christie has been booked by the Reisenfeld theatres.

To Burn Tenement for Sake of Realism

A two-story brick tenement will be built by Metro on Recreation Field, near Astoria, Long Island, and then set on fire and burned to the ground in one of the night scenes of "A Message from Mars," the forthcoming Maxwell Karger Production starring Bert Lytell that is now being made by Metro. The building will represent a typical tenement in the Whitechapel district of London.

Vestoff Serova Dancers in Bert Lytell Cast

A setting of exceptional beauty is said to have been constructed for the ballet of the Vestoff Serova Dancers, which is to be a novel feature of the Christmas festival scene in the forthcoming Maxwell Karger production, "A Message from Mars," starring Bert Lytell. The picture is now being made at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street. Mme. Serova, who is one of the foremost teachers of the art of dancing in America, will personally conduct her ballet.

New York's Five Points Re-built as Setting in "Noblesse Oblige"

A REPLICA of the well-known Five Points section of New York City has been built on the Goldwyn lot in Culver City for the filming of Gertrude Atherton's first story written directly for the screen. It has gone into production under the working title of "Noblesse Oblige" with Wallace Worsley in charge. The set shows the Five Points section as it appeared in 1869, and it was only after a long search among the various libraries in New York that photographs of the Five Points at the desired period were found in the archives of the New York Historical Society, states Goldwyn. These photographs were followed to the minutest detail in reconstructing the part of old New York, it is declared.

In filming the sections of the Atherton photoplay in which the Five Points figure, more than 500 extra people will be used. Most of the action of the picture takes place in San Francisco of the same period. Lewis S. Stone and Mabel Julienne Scott have the leading roles, while others in the cast include Arthur Hoyt, Charles Clary, Josephine Crowell and Kate Lester. his company of twenty-five left last week for Banff, Canada, where they will make exterior scenes for "Snow Blindness," the new Katherine Newlin Burt picture. Russell Simpson, Mary Alden, Cullen Landis, Pauline Starke and Hamilton Ross have the leading roles. The company hopes to return to the studios in time to eat Christmas dinner.

Tom Moore and his supporting company in the picturization of Archibald Clavering Gunter's famous old novel and play, "Mr. Barnes of New York," have returned from Laguna Beach where they have been taking exteriors. Russ Powell and George Kinkle have been added to the cast which includes Naomi Childers, Sydney Ainsworth, Anna Lehr, Otto Hoffman, Kate Lester and Louis Willoughby. Victor Schertzinger is directing.

Hodkinson Releases to Run for 18 Days

E. P. Pickler, the Hodkinson representative in St. Louis, writes the home office as follows:

"The following is an example of what exhibitors think of Hodkinson productions:

"Last week I booked fifty pictures at a very good price to the Grand Theatre, Memphis, Mo., a town of only two thousand population. This is a new house, and will open up with Hodkinson productions running them for eighteen consecutive days. I consider this a great boost for Hodkinson and feel safe in saying to you that I shall certainly produce many more such contracts in the near future for exhibitors everywhere are rallying round the Hodkinson banner in an eminently satisfactory manner."

Metro Company Storm-Tossed for 6 Hours

The Alice Lake company, making "Mother Love" for a Metro special, underwent a dangerous experience on the Pacific recently when they were tossed about for six hours in a fifty-foot tugboat. The company had left Los Angeles on board a sailing vessel, followed by a small tugboat which was to carry them back. Despite the heavy sea that was running, the camera was transplanted to the tug, and Jack Dougherty made his leap from the big boat, although he was suffering severely from seasickness.

Special Presentation for Kineto Subject

Starting next Sunday Manager Edward Hyman, of the Brooklyn Strand, promises a presentation of another Kineto subject that will set a new standard in beauty accompaniments. The subject will be "Hiawatha," said to be one of the loveliest Kineto subjects that has been produced. The titles throughout are taken from Longfellow's poem.

Mr. Hyman intends to build up an illustrative accompaniment that would meet the artistic demands of the subject. "Hiawatha" is being billed as a "Scenic with Soloists." Three songs will be used. As the introduction there will be Caveness's "Hiawatha," a tenor solo sung on stage with a special setting. Following this comes Wiedoft's "Na-Jo" sung off stage, beginning as the lights fade out into a darkened house and the picture begins. The finale takes up "The Land of Sky Blue Waters," by Cadman, and sung by the Mendelssohn Quartet, timed to finish with the picture.

The second William Fox production in which Louise Lovely is starred will soon be released. It is titled "Partners of Fate," and is said to be a most interesting story that gives Miss Lovely plenty of opportunity for showing her ability as an actress. Miss Lovely's first picture for Fox, "The Little Grey Mouse," was well received by exhibitors and established her in favor with the public.

Supporting Miss Lovely in "Partners of Fate" are players well known to "fans" throughout the country. There is William Scott, who has appeared in a score of Fox pictures. Then there is Rosemary Theby and Phil McCullough and George Seigmann, and Richard Cummings. The baby in the play is Eileen O'Malley.

"Partners of Fate" was written by Stephen Chalmers and Robert Dillion wrote the scenaria. Bernard Durning directed the picture. Incidentally this is Durning's first Fox picture.

Marguerite Clark has entered the independent producing field. "Scrambled Wives," her first picture, is to be released through First National.

Metro Pictures Corporation scheduled the release of "Billions," Nazimova's most recent starring vehicle, for December 6. "Billions" is the romance of a Russian princess and a Washington Square poet. Greenwich Village, the Russia of Czardom and the high life of the exclusive winter resorts of California form the background.

Universal City Made a 3rd Class Postoffice

The United States Postoffice Department has just promoted the Universal City postoffice from a fourth to a third-class station, making it the senior office of the suburban district in which it is located.

Mrs. Suzanne Seigler, the postmistress, handles over 2,000 letters a day which are addressed to the screen celebrities at Universal City, and on an average of 300 additional letters which are erroneously addressed to the world's film capital.

High Standards in Fox Special

"Blind Wives" is Picture Version of a Famous Play

IT is the declared conviction of William Fox that when "Blind Wives" is released for the money-making uses of picture showmen on December 19, an offering will be available that is unusual even in these days of great investments in photoplay production. Luxury, but not extravagance; production cost that will show upon the screen; elaborateness in scenic investiture and settings; correctness in locations and atmosphere, and a cast selected for individual fitness to depict every character, are some of the assurances Mr. Fox makes to showmen, on behalf of "Blind Wives," in advance of the expression of critical opinion by the reviewers and the final verdict of the box-office.

Just as Mr. Fox stood back of "While New York Sleeps" in the announcements he made before the release of that episodic super-play, so does he now sponsor the Edward Knoblock stage play, "My Lady's Dress," and its screen development under the strikingly appropriate title, "Blind Wives." The public certified the predictions made by Mr. Fox in the previous instance, and for "Blind Wives" he predicts still greater appreciation.

Aside from the important box-office angle that promises, according to Mr. Fox, to bring "Blind Wives" into rivalry for records with "While New York Sleeps," there is a production similarity between the two photodramas—"Blind Wives" also is screened in episodes. Likewise Charles J. Brabin directed both features, and the principal players in each of the two presentations are Marc MacDermott, Estelle Taylor and Harry Sothern.

Five chapters, or episodes, are coordinated in the Knoblock photoplay. Five separate stories are assembled in detail, all bearing directly upon the prevailing theme of the narrative—the blindness and extravagance of women of fashion who strive to outdress one another as they move behind the shop-windows of "society."

On the stage—when the Knoblock original of "Blind Wives" ran long and profitably in New York, London, Paris, and on tour—these episodes were of necessity framed within the limitations of painted scenery. The "off stage" incidents and unacted interludes that mean so much in the value and completeness of the screen adaptation were necessarily left to fleeting imagination. Spoken "lines" conveyed but little of the dramatic force that dominates (according to those who have seen the picture) the screen presentation.

Silks, furs, artificial flowers and the human models on which gowns of fashion are displayed to prospective buyers all provide the core of episodes that blend in the tensely dramatic tale that is unfolded in appropriately framed surroundings. There are drama, tragedy and flashes of comedy associated with each factor that enters into the completed screen narrative.

Ray on Christmas Program

Joe Plunkett Selects "Nineteen and Phyllis" to Offset Usual "Slump"

THE first New York showing of Charles Ray's newest picture, "Nineteen and Phyllis," in which the popular star will be presented by Arthur S. Kane, under First National release, will be at the Strand theatre beginning Sunday, December 19. Thus this film, declared by all who have seen it in private views to be another Ray triumph, becomes the Christmas week attraction at the Broadway house.

Officials of the Arthur S. Kane organization see in this engagement an endorsement of the appeal of Charles Ray as a popular star. The last week before Christmas is regarded as one of the most serious "slump periods" of the year. Stores and shops remain open at night to accommodate the great mass of people who permit their Christmas purchasing to go until the last moment. The picture theatres have inevitably suffered in diminished attendances as a result.

John C. Ragland, general manager of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, said this week:

"Mr. Plunkett's selection of 'Nineteen and Phyllis' is another proof of the excellent judgment he displays habitually, and it is the greatest possible compliment to the art and the popularity of Mr. Ray. Theatre directors consider Christmas week the blue week of the year. Many legitimate companies lay off during the week rather than face the competition of the shoppers. No experienced manager is satisfied merely to book an attraction that stands a fighting chance to prove remunerative. He insists upon obtaining one whose power as a box-office attraction admits of no doubt.

"Mr. Plunkett, who knows his public, demanded and booked Mr. Ray because he knows that this great star, far from being an experiment, has proved himself a magnet whose power to attract is uninfluenced by the season of the year or the insistance of counter attractions. This recognition must be peculiarly gratifying to Mr. Ray, as it is to his legion of admirers among picture fans of all classes."

Rothacker Prints Win Trade Endorsements

When W. R. Rothacker's returned from California last week he found on his desk the following tributes:

From E. C. Rhoden, Kansas City Manager of A. H. Blank Enterprises:

"During the last couple of months, we have been receiving prints from other laboratories and have had the opportunity of making a comparison. I want to say in all sincerity that the only prints we can absolutely depend upon are Rothacker prints.

"We have never received so many complaints from exhibitors on the condition of our prints as we have in the past few weeks and I am glad to say that after tracing these complaints down, not one of them have been on a print from your organization."

From J. R. Grainger of the Marshall Neilan Productions:

"We saw 'Dinty' yesterday at the Strand theatre, and I wish to compliment the Rothacker Film Company on the quality of work that they have turned out on this production. It was excellent in every way."

Heavy Demand for Educationals in South

A. C. Bromberg, manager of the Atlantic branch of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., returned to his home this week after a number of days spent in the home office familiarizing himself with a number of details. Although the Atlanta branch was not opened until September 1st, it is reported that the comedies and scenics have reached almost a hundred per cent booking through the larger theatres of the south and that they are now finding the same warm reception in the smaller cities.

Dorothy Dalton Goes to Northern New York

The snow covered shores of Lake Champlain and the environs of Port Henry, N. Y., will be filmed for the exterior scenes of Dorothy Dalton's latest Paramount picture, "The Teaser." Miss Dalton, R. William Neill, director, technical staff, and forty extra people left New York this week for Fort Henry, where they expect to remain ten days.

Ina Claire in Big Special

"Polly With a Past" Scheduled for Current Week; From Belasco's Play

"POLLY WITH A PAST," the Metro production, starring Ina Claire, which was picturized from David Belasco's great stage success by George Middleton and Guy Bolton, is scheduled for the current week. Starting with the bidding for the screen rights of the Belasco stage success in which Metro outbid all other companies, when it secured the Middleton-Bolton comedy for production on the screen with Ina Claire in the role she made famous on the stage, the filming of the stage play was attended throughout by a succession of incidents that rendered the entire affair quite noteworthy, declares Metro.

Miss Claire worked before the camera at the Metro studios on mornings and afternoons while in the midst of her highly successful engagement as the star of Dr. Belasco's phenomenal stage hit, "The Gold Diggers."

"Polly With a Past" was one of the hits of the theatrical season when it was produced by David Belasco a few seasons back. It enjoyed a run of a full season in New York and another on tour. Ina Claire enacted the role of the little Ohio girl who became a housemaid in the quarters of some young bachelors and then impersonated a French adventuress in order to salvage a young man from the wreck of an unfortunate love affair.

The cast supporting Miss Claire in "Polly With a Past" was chosen with a careful regard to type and includes Ralph Graves, Marie Wainwright, Harry Benham, Frank Currier and Clifton Weeb. The production, which was made on the most elaborate scale, was directed personally by Maxwell Karger and photographed by Arthur Martinelli. The screen version of the stage play was made by June Mathis and Arthur Zellner. L. J. Vermilyea created the art interior for the production.

Barrymore Film Finished

"The Great Adventure," Comedy, Completed by Lionel Barrymore

LIONEL BARRYMORE has completed "The Great Adventure," the third production in a series of four in which he is to be starred by the Whitman Bennett Productions Co., for distribution by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and has already started on the fourth, "Jim, The Penman." The cutting and assembling of "The Great Adventure" will take but a short time, according to announcement from the studio. And the finished print probably will be delivered to the distributing association within the next two weeks.

Mr. Bennett and Kenneth Webb, who directed the production, as well as the star himself, are gratified with the result of the decision to star Mr. Barrymore in a comedy. "The Great Adventure" is genuine humor straight through.

Mr. Barrymore has the role of Priam Farll, the greatest artist in all England, whose innate shyness has caused him to live in seclusion with but one man servant to escape the adulation of women folks. Lady Sophia, however, has decided that what he needs to bring him to true greatness is a wife such as she herself would make him, and sets about convincing him that he should marry her. A chase half way across Europe and back follows, and Farll finally retires to his last defense, his studio in London. There Henry Leek, his man servant, sickens and dies. The physician mistakes the valet for the artist and Farll seeing an escape from the Amazon attentions of Lady Sophie permits his own name to be entered on the death certificate.

Among those in the cast supporting Mr. Barrymore in the production are Thomas A. Braidon, Octavius Brooke, Doris Rankin, Ivo Dawson, Charles Lane, Ted Prouty, Katherine Stewart, E. J. Ratcliffe, Paul Kelly, Arthur Rankin and Maybeth Carr.

Norma and Constance Talmadge have been selected as the most popular stars of motion-pictures in a voting competition among the readers of the Daily News, which has a wide circulation in New York City and the surrounding territory, including New Jersey, Long Island and southern New York State. Against the field Norma finished in first place in the likings of the fans with nearly 3,000 votes more than her nearest competitor, and Constance won second place with a lead of 106 votes over the holder of the third position.

Following the success of the contest from the standpoint of a newspaper in New York, the Chicago Tribune started a similar competition. Norma Talmadge was proved as popular there as she was shown to be in the New York competition, and two other Associated First National Pictures, Inc., stars—Anita Stewart and Charles Ray—were well up among leaders, within four days after the competition was started in Chicago.

Pathe News No. 94 Has Interesting Shots

Pathe News, No. 94, is full of interesting views from start to finish. British tanks rumble through the streets in Dublin, their guns menacing the public; English soldiers in skirmish line lie on their stomachs on the sidewalks ready for action; busses are stopped and searched by the military. There is also a vivid portrait of the young and manly, serious-faced, new Lord Mayor of Cork—the third to hold that office in eight months—Donald O'Callaghan.

From one seaplane, speeding along near the surface of the water, a Pathe cameraman "shoots" a sailor's skillful and daring feat of balancing himself on an aquaplane towed by another seaplane at a speed of 75 miles an hour.

A timely news feature depicts scenes of Britain's tribute to its dead buried on the fields of France. The body of one unidentified soldier is transported with military honors from France to England, and to Westminster Abbey to rest henceforth among England's greatest heroes, whose names live forever.

Appropriate to the Pathe Tenth Anniversary celebration, outstanding events of the last ten years are republished—such as the Black Tom disaster of 1916; the frightful damage done by the explosion of a munition ship at Halifax; and disaster spread by the terrific storm that swept the Gulf States in 1915.

Park Theatre Opened at Asbury Park, Dec. 3

Harry J. Rockafeller of Asbury Park, N. J., announces that opening of his new Park Theatre on December 3, on Summerfield avenue, Asbury Park. The theatre has a seating capacity of 700. A spacious lobby is a feature of the structure. The opening attraction is the Metro release, "Love, Honor and Obey."

Dramatic Interest as Well as Patriotism

The new Congress is expected to take up at once the question of restricting, or at least further regulating, the promiscuous immigration of all-comers from foreign-lands. Indeed, the newspapers of December 3rd reported that the House Immigration Committee had approved a bill to halt abruptly for two years the incoming tide.

Whatever may be done in the matter can in no way lessen the necessity of "absorbing" along intelligent and helpful lines the host that has thus far, since Armistice Day, poured into the United States not forgetting the millions of foreign-born that have lived here for years and still are un-Americanized. And in this need it is admitted that moving pictures can play the most helpful part of all agencies at command of the Government.

William Fox realized this when he produced "The Face at Your Window." But not alone as Americanization propaganda does "The Face at Your Window" present itself. The reviewers said at the outset that this Max Marcin story held interest as strong dramatic entertainment; the public in thousands of theatres have rendered a substantiating verdict, and showmen have garnered their legitimate profits through their action in helping in the work of making America a greater, a better and a more prosperous country.

Riviera Locations for Oppenheim's Play

Paul Powell, who is now in London to direct for Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, has just been on a continental trip, taking with him his assistant, Mr. R. J. Cullen, and Margaret Turnbull, who is writing the scenario for the new play written by E. Phillips Oppenheim, at present entitled, "The Mystery Road."

The party started from Paris, and then via Marseilles they went down to Nice which they made headquarters for a prospecting trip through the Riviera, with a view to finding suitable locations for the play.

Mr. Powell will start directing as soon as Mr. Donald Crisp is through with his work of producing Mr. Edward Knoblock's "Appearances." Margaret Turnbull is now hard at work on the scenario for the production of the Islington studio.

"The Girl in the Taxi" Near Completion

All the interior scenes of "The Girl in the Taxi," Carter De Haven's second picture for First National, will be finished this week, it is expected, and the company will then move out for the shooting of exteriors. There are few of the latter and it is thought the completed production will be in the cutting room within ten days. Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation is acting as eastern business representative of Mr. and Mrs. De Haven.

Co-starring the De Havens, "The Girl in the Taxi" also boasts of such screen players as King Baggott, Grace Cunard and Otis Harlan.

Irene Castle Back in Pictures

Hodkinson to Release Four Productions Yearly

IRENE CASTLE, long famous for her grace and her inimitable way of wearing clothes, is coming back to the silversheet. Mrs. Castle is to be the featured player in four super-productions a year which are to be made by the Cawwood Pictures Corporation and released through the W. W. Hodkinson organization.

The Cawwood Pictures Corporation is a recently organized company headed by C. A. Weeks, who for the past two and a half years has been associated with Benjamin B. Hampton as vice-president of the Benj. B. Hampton Productions. Mr. Weeks has just severed his connection with the Hampton organization and, together with Edwin L. Hollywood, has gone in for the making of motion picture productions.

His associate, Edwin L. Hollywood, has been schooled in every branch of stage and motion picture production. During the past year Mr. Hollywood directed Harry Morey in four pictures—"The Gauntlet," "The Sea Rider," "The Flaming Clue" and "The Birth of a Soul." Mr. Hollywood also directed the U. S. Governmental all-star production, "The Immigrant," in which were such players as Richard Barthelmess, Zena Keefe, Warren Cook, Barbara Allen and many others of equal prominence. He directed May Marsh in "Polly of the Circus," Mae Murray in

Irene Castle, who is to be featured in productions produced by Cawwood Pictures Corp., and released by W. W. Hodkinson

"Sweet Kitty Bellairs," two Vivian Martin productions and was associated with James Young in the direction of a number of Clara Kimball Young pictures. Mr. Hollywood was also art director and general manager of production for Mary Pickford when she made "Less Than the Dust" and "The Pride of the Clan" for Artcraft.

The Cawwood Pictures Corporation have purchased a great many well known books and an announcement concerning their first production may be expected shortly.

Mr. Weeks, in speaking of the plans of the new company, said in part, "Our main object at all times will be to combine to the fullest degree what both the exhibitor and the theatre-going public wants. It is our intention to combine in one feature just as many exploitation angles as we possibly can. By which I mean to say that a vast number of productions have been made which only the name of some famous star could swing. Or producers have given some big book behind which lies the drawing power of some author's name mediocre production. We purpose to do things in a totally different way: Our production will give the showman—for whom they were primarily designed—a minimum of four big exploitation points. First, he will have the advertising value of Irene Castle's name, for Mrs. Castle will be starred in each one of our productions. Secondly, there will be the story, and it may be said here and now that no story will ever be accepted for production which is not in every respect worthy.

"Then in the casts which we will give to our productions there will be found only players of real ability and real popularity, sufficiently strong in every respect to justify the description all-star. And there the showman has three of the big exploitation possibilities which will be attached to forthcoming Cawwood productions: Mrs. Castle's popularity, the advertising possibilities and a big story by a big author and an all-star cast.

"For the fourth point we offer Mr. Hollywood's reputation as a director—which is also a firmly established thing. Thus it may be seen that we have a real foundation upon which to build."

Goldwyn Leaves for the Coast

Authors' Activities in Production to Be Increased

WITH extensive plans in mind for the further development of the activities of authors in picture production, Samuel Goldwyn, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, left last Saturday on the Limited for Culver City, California, the home of the Goldwyn studios.

Practically the entire roster of eminent authors, which includes Rex Beach, Rupert Hughes, Gertrude Atherton, Basil King, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Gouverneur Morris and Leroy Scott, is now on the Coast or travelling Westward. There will be a big session, and every theory and practice of story structure and picture structure will be threshed out when Mr. Goldwyn arrives.

"A little over a year ago," said Mr. Goldwyn before he left New York, "we started the Eminent Authors with a group of America's most widely known writers. Simultaneously we introduced into motion pictures the greatest of all producing ideas—that the author of screen stories had to become an integral part of the producing force.

"All ideas that are big ideas grow entirely beyond the bounds of the initial conception. So with this one. And what is more, the real developments of our experiment, the flower of motion picture perfection, is still to blossom forth. It sounds trite but really we have only just started.

"Every Goldwyn author is either on the studio lot in Culver City right now, or headed that way. That in itself is unusual when we consider how distant the author once was. What is more the majority of the stories in production at this time are original and written directly for the camera. Those stories which are adaptations are being turned into continuity by the author himself. For we realize that it is as absurd for an author to contribute his story or play to screen and allow someone else to adapt it for him as it is absurd for a mother to give birth to a child and to allow someone else to bring it up."

Before he left for the Coast, Mr. Goldwyn announced the appointment of Ralph Block as editor of the scenario and research department.

Ralph Block, formerly dramatic editor of the Kansas City Star and New York Tribune, and more recently director of advertising and publicity for the Goldwyn Company, has been chosen for the important post of editor of the scenario and research department (located in New York) of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Block's work will have a wide scope and will include the greater development of the editorial staff in New York. The new local Goldwyn editor has just completed a trip to the studios at Culver City where his conferences with Vice-President Lehr and Managing Editor J. G. Hawks as well as his first-hand observation of Goldwyn production facilities have provided immediate preparation for his new activity.

Mr. Block has an extensive record as a writer, journalist and critic. Since joining the Goldwyn forces he has written a good deal on the art of making pictures and these articles are soon to be collected and published in book form. His connection with the theatre has been a long one and has been of a construcstructive nature. At the present time he is serving as a member of the Advisory Board of the Theatre Guild, which is doing distinctive things in the way of theatrical productions in the country.

THE PRICE OF SILENCE

First glimpse of what to expect from William Farnum's latest starring vehicle, "The Scuttlers," a William Fox picture

When the curtain was lowered on Pathe's "Pearson Month" contest, at midnight, November 30th, one thing had been noted as a certainty. All Pathe records for new business and collections had been bettered, declared a statement from the Pathe home office.

The winners in the four divisions of the $10,000 prize contest will not be known for at least another week. While the contest closed at midnight, November 30th, all contracts mailed up to that hour will be included in the final result. This means that it will take a week for the Pacific Coast contracts to reach the home office, and another week before they are all tallied.

Edgar Lewis Finishes "The Sage Hen"

Edgar Lewis has given Pathe another Western picture, in "The Sage Hen," which he has just completed and delivered. The picture was exhibited in the Pathe projection room last week, and those who had seen "The Barrier," "The Great Divide," and other of Mr. Lewis's outdoor productions pronounced his latest work superior even to these master productions.

"The Sage Hen" will bring back to the screen Gladys Brockwell. The cast includes, besides Miss Brockwell, Wallace McDonald, Helen Case, James Mason, Arthur Morrison, Lillian Rich, Alfred Allen, and the wonder baby, Richard Hedrick, aged three.

Fire Apparatus Wanted for Lytell Feature

Metro is in the market for several second-hand fire engines, hose carts, and hook and ladder trucks to be used in the forthcoming Maxwell Karger production, "A Message from Mars," starring Bert Lytell, which is now being made at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street. The decision to purchase outright the first apparatus called for in one of the scenes of the new picture was necessitated by the inability of Metro officials to obtain the co-operation of the city fire department and their permission to use the city's apparatus.

"The Scuttlers" Due Dec. 12

William Farnum Presented in Role of Detective in Story of the Sea

DECEMBER 12 is the date set for the release of the next William Farnum screen production under the William Fox banner. The new entertainment is an original story by Clyde C. Westover entitled "The Scuttlers."

"The Scuttlers" is described as an absorbing deep sea mystery drama of dynamic power, in which Mr. Farnum portrays the character of a special investigator of Lloyds who allows himself to be shanghaied aboard an outgoing ship. The skipper has long been under suspicion of scuttling his vessels for the purpose of collecting the insurance not alone on the hulls, but "fake" cargoes.

In his effort to secure evidence against the skipper and his mate on board the bandit ship—behind his disguise as a seaman—the investigator runs afoul of many strange people and thrilling adventure. The hero meets the beautiful daughter of the suspected sea captain. The girl has been brought along to serve as a "blind." When the ship is scuttled at sea after a mighty battle between the investigator and the big brute of a mate, girl and man finally make their getaway in a lifeboat, and land on a desert island, where more scenes are enacted.

Mr. Farnum by plot and circumstance is enabled to show his histrionic powers to the best advantage, states William Fox. The "investigator" is said to be the most daring type that has yet been attempted for the screen.

The megaphone was handled by the veteran J. Gordon Edwards, and "The Scuttlers" makes his forty-second production for William Fox. In the cast that supports Mr. Farnum are Jackie Saunders, Hershel Mayall, G. Raymond Nye, Arthur Millett and Harry Spingler.

Frank Mayo in "Colorado"

Universal Will Produce Augustus Thomas's Play With Strong Cast

"COLORADO," Augustus Thomas's melodrama of the mining country, is being produced as a moving-picture by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, it has just been learned. Universal's popular star, Frank Mayo, will have the leading role. Production upon this piece already has begun at Universal City.

Two decades ago, "Colorado" was one of the popular plays of the American stage. It was one of the best of the noted "State plays," by Thomas, and which took their names from various states in the West. Among these series was "Alabama," "Arizona," and "In Mizzoura." "Colorado" was first produced for the stage in 1901.

Universal obtained the picture rights for this play last Spring, and since that time has been perfecting plans for its screen presentation. Every effort has been made to assure a picturization which will bring out the virile strength put in it by the author, who, as America's foremost playwright, long has been noted for strong stage personages and gripping action.

A strong cast has been engaged to support Mayo in this feature. Among them are Lillian West, Charles Le Moyne, Leonard Clapham, Charles Newton, Dan Crimmins and Rosa Gore. Clapham will have a "heavy" part, somewhat similar to those roles in which he first gained favor in Universal productions. During the last few months, he has been playing hero roles in "The Red Rider Series," a series of two-reelers dealing with the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. LeMoyne is known as the "heavy" of many Harry Carey productions. Reaves Eason will direct "Colorado."

Celebrities Watch DeMille at Work

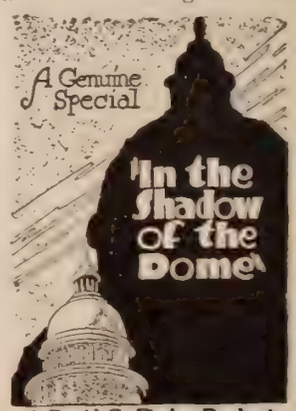
During the filming of the Barrie play, "What Every Woman Knows," Cecil DeMille has been honored by having as spectators men and women prominent in the field of literature, drama and painting. It so happened that during his work on this production Sir Gilbert Parker, Edward Knoblock, Penrhyn Stanlaws, Avery Hopwood and Elinor Glyn came to the Lasky studio to study screen technique and write for Paramount Pictures. Each of these well-known artists spent much time on the William DeMille set, watching every detail of the producer's work.

Louise Lovely Vehicle Is Set for Dec. 12

"Partners of Fate" is the title and December 12 the release date of Louise Lovely's next William Fox attraction. The photoplay is based on a story by Stephen Chalmers. Bernard Durning directed the screen presentation from a scenario by Robert Dillion.

Physical Training for Rothacker Employees

On the theory that physical well being of laboratory workers spells good film prints, physical culture exercises have become a part of the daily program at the Chicago Rothacker plant, according to an announcement of the big film house.



Metro Pictures to Be Ahead of the Styles

Metro pictures hereafter will have the services of a fashion authority whose word will be law on all matters of modern dress. Henri Bendell, of Fifth Avenue, New York, will "dress" forthcoming Metro productions, under a contract arranged by Bayard Veiller, director of productions at the company's west coast studios in Hollywood.

Under the plan now worked out in detail by Mr. Veiller and the importing style expert, it is expected to keep the costumes of Metro stars not only up to the minute, but ahead of the showings in the big shops catering to the wants of milady of fashion.

Foreign Atmosphere Is Feature of "813"

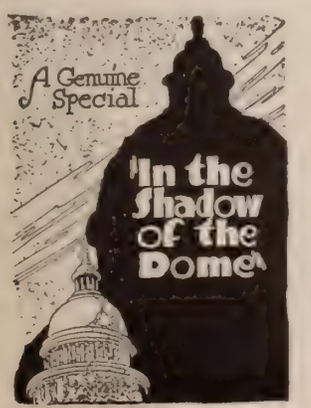
Robertson-Cole offers "813," which is based on the Arsene Lupin story of the same name, as a proof that an American-made picture can favorably compare with a foreign-made production in the point of correct European atmosphere and types. Wedgwood Nowell, who enjoys the reputation of being the "most perfect Latin type on the screen," takes the part of Arsene Lupin. Kathryn Adams plays opposite the star. Wallace Beery, J. P. Lockney, H. Milton Ross, William V. Mong, Ralph Lewis, Mark Fenton and Laura La Plant are also members of the cast.

Jersey Youngsters Like Cowboy Star

Manager "Jim" Brennan of the Opera House, Bayonne, N. J., is enthusiastic over the pulling powers of Tom Mix, now appearing in Western pictures for William Fox. And with good reason.

Mr. Brennan states that on Thanksgiving day he opened with Tom Mix in "The Untamed," and shortly before matinee time a long line of youthful Americans were discernible in every direction wending their way to the theatre. The mob of younsters, augmented by the grown-ups, smashed every record of the house, at both matinee and evening performances.

For two days the theatre was in a state of siege while youthful Bayonne continued turning out en masse.



A David G Fischer Production

Teachers View Tourneur Film

MAURICE TOURNEUR'S screen elaboration of James Fenimore Cooper's famous story of the American Indian, "The Last of the Mohicans," has become a nation-wide box office success in the two weeks since its release, declares a statement just received from the New York headquarters of the Associated Producers.

Exhibitors in every section of the country not already in possession of Associated Producers contracts are writing or wiring to branch offices and the home office seeking to book this production, according to the Associated Producers' announcement.

The publicity and exploitation possibilities in private screenings of the picture before teachers and school children have not been overlooked. Thomas A. Brady, resident manager of the Buffalo office of Associated Producers, handled one of the largest of these showings. The picture was shown in the Regent Theatre at Rochester, New York, before the members of the New York State Teachers' Association. Mr. Brady, upon learning that the teachers were in convention at Rochester, made prompt arrangements to show them the production.

"At the close of the picture," says the Rochester Herald, "which has been made with a wealth of detail and historical accuracy, the teachers enthusiastically applauded it, and many personally expressed their belief that it will be a great educational feature in teaching American history."

Following the lead of Mr. Brady, Mark S. Nathan, manager of the New York exchange of Associated Producers, showed the production on Wednesday morning of this week, at the DeWitt Clinton High School, 59th Street and 10th Avenue, New York City, to an audience of superintendents, assistant superintendents, teachers and several hundred public school children. The showing was arranged with the cooperation of F. A. Rexford, supervisor of civics for the Board of Education.

Cooper's great drama, "The Last of the Mohicans," has been picturized by Maurice Tourneur for release through Associated Producers

Associated Producers branch managers in every section of the country have been instructed to make this tie-up with the schools, on the theory that the thousands of teachers who see this production will in turn recommend it to hundreds of thousands—even millions—of school children.

Mr. Tourneur, who is in New York on a vacation, interested himself in the New York school showing and was present when the picture was shown.

The critique committee of the National Board of Review called a largely attended special meeting recently and enthusiastically approved "The Last of the Mohicans." Mr. Tourneur, who was present, addressed the meeting and was congratulated upon the excellence of his production. The approval of the committee means that the picture will be placed on a list of specially selected entertainments recommended by the board—an honor that comes only to the best productions.

One hundred prints of "The Last of the Mohicans" are available in the twenty branch offices of Associated Producers throughout the country—a number ample to take care of the extraordinary demand from schools, churches, lodges and similar organizations which are desirous of obtaining the picture after it has been shown in the theatres.

Maximum Aid to Exhibitors

Universal to Offer Exploitation Aids in Advertising

UNIVERSAL has sounded a new note in advertising and exploitation, by including in its national trade advertising inserts, actual exhibitor aids and pertinent information that will help the exhibitor to present Universal pictures with maximum success. This is in accord with the plans of Universal's new Exploitation Department, headed by P. D. Cochrane, to stand by the slogan "Help the Exhibitor."

"I am firmly convinced that it is as important for motion picture producers to help the exhibitor sell their pictures to the public as it is for the producers to sell their pictures to the exhibitor, and it is this theory upon which the Universal Exploitation Department is run," said Mr. Cochrane in a recent statement explaining the innovation in Universal's advertising presentation.

"The average exhibitor reads the trade papers to get ideas which will help him put over the pictures he has booked, as much as to learn about new pictures he has not booked. Therefore, Universal intends to give him just the exploitation ideas he needs—at the time he is looking for them.

"In the recent issues of the trade publications, we have devoted several pages of advertising to exploitation ideas for popularizing the new Dorothy Phillips picture, 'Once to Every Woman.' This picture offers unusual exploitation angles and is doing a business far in excess of anything anticipated.

"We did not stop at getting out the usual campaign book and press sheet for this Universal Jewel picture. We are still pounding away with new exhibitor aids and new tie-ups useful to the wide-awake showman.

"One of the most popular 'aids' thus distributed is a super-herald, made in the form of a four-page folder of music-sheet size. On its inside pages is a copy of the favorite old song 'Ben Bolt.' This song is woven into the plot of the picture in such a way that it offers the most fruitful exploitation angle ever enjoyed by a Universal picture. The cover of the super-herald contains attractive pictures of Dorothy Phillips, along with the title of the song, and attractive information concerning the picture. It is for general distribution in advance of play-date.

"So big has this super-herald gone over that we are pressed to supply enough to our exhibitor-patrons. The distribution already has amounted to half-a-million. Universal is selling these song-sheets at a loss, but the huge success of the picture far outweighs questions of minor expense in our campaign to play along with our exhibitors."

Dietz Heads Goldwyn's Publicity Forces

Howard Dietz, for the past year the publicity manager of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has been appointed director of advertising and publicity. During the past two years Mr. Dietz has, in turn, headed every department connected with advertising and publicity and has been largely responsible for many of the exploitation policies adopted by the Goldwyn Company.

In addition to his work with the Goldwyn Company, Mr. Deitz is serving actively as a member of the censorship committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The Advertising and Publicity staffs under Mr. Dietz will remain as they are at present with Silas Spitzer assistant in charge of the advertising and press books, and Lynde Denig acting as Mr. Dietz's assistant in publicity work.

Counting Receipts Took Up All of His Time

Goldwyn submits the following incident as conclusive proof of the popularity of its release, "Madame X," starring Pauline Frederick. The picture was booked through the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., Montreal, by A. Moisan, manager of the Auditorium theatre, Quebec. When the exchange sent Mr. Moisan a letter, inquiring why a check had not been sent, it received the following reply from the Quebec exhibitor:

"I have your letter of the 23d and you must have our cheque by now for 'Madame X.'

"I am pleased to tell you that we have been turning away people every night since Monday, and we had no time to write up cheques, trusting that you would be lenient enough to wait. This feature brings us only favorable comment, and all are fully satisfied. We opened big, and I am glad to tell you that 'Madame X' gave us a great help."

Dorothy Mackaill Again in "Torchy" Subject

Dorothy Mackaill, the young English actress who scored such a hit in "Torchy's Millions," is again leading woman in "Torchy Mixes In," a January release through Educational exchanges. She is also appearing in the comedy that follows this one. Production is well ahead on these two-reelers from the stories by Sewell Ford, the eighth being in process of completion.

A notable cast is promised in "Torchy Mixes In," many of the scenes being made on "the hurricane deck" of the Majestic roof.

Philip Rosen to Direct All-Star Production

Philip E. Rosen has been selected by Bayard Veiller, director of productions at the California plant, to handle the megaphone in the making of "What Is the Matter with Marriage?" an all-star super-production upon which the actual filming starts this week. Milton Sills, Ora Carew and "Nigel Barrie already have been selected as three of the principals in an all-star cast.

Pictographs Sell Rapidly

Drive Begun by Sales Forces for Goldwyn-Bray Reels Bearing Fruit

THE market for the Bray Pictographs, released through Goldwyn, has been greatly widened and the exhibition interest in these brief educational films greatly stimulated, Goldwyn salesmen at the different exchanges report, as a result of a special salesmen's drive on Pictographs during the past few weeks. The salesmen, states Goldwyn, found that the many exhibitors who had been booking the Pictographs in the past are eager to get the new ones as fast as they are made and that nearly every new exhibitor to book one of them was soon ready to book them all.

These pictures are made by the Bray Studios in New York City. They are equally at home in depicting the working of a scientific principle, such as that involved in long distance wireless telephony, or in placing before the spectators' eyes the home life of birds and wild animals. The process known as animated drawings, invented and perfected by the Bray Studios, is used in illustrating the workings of scientific principles, while straight photography is used for nature subjects, the operation of machinery, etc.

The nature studies of William and Irene Finley, which have been a feature of several recent Pictographs, have held an unusual appeal for picture fans, state Goldwyn officials. They were obtained by the Finleys on a long trip which they took for the National Association of Audubon Societies for the Protection of Wild Animals and Birds.

The travel pictures of Major E. Alexander Powell, obtained on a trip around the world, especially undertaken for the Bray Pictograph, are another popular new feature that makes a strong selling argument. The titles are written by Marguerite Gove.

The comics used in connection with the Pictographs, the Judge Rummy and the Jerry-on-the-Job series, have also proved most popular with the fans, it is stated.

Former Neilan Players Cast in New Pictures

The production of "Not a Drum Was Heard" brings two popular screen players back to the Marshall Neilan fold. The first is Jane Novak, one of the leading players in "The River's End," who in the new picture will appear opposite James Kirkwood in the leading feminine role. The other is Charles West, the "dope fiend" of "The River's End," who is cast in a somewht similar role in "Not a Drum Was Heard."

Why Buy Book's Title to Throw It Away?

In a statement just issued by John W. McKay, general-manager of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, the advisability of changing titles of pictures from those attached to the novel, play or story upon which the picture is based is seriously questioned. To buy a novel with a well-known title at a fabulous price, says Mr. McKay, and then promptly throw the title away, when the story is filmed, is depriving the exhibitor of the drawing-power of a well-established title and is a waste for the producer.

"To despoil the film version of a widely read novel of its original title is throwing overboard the very asset for which a high price is paid. And unless the book title is used, what is gained in filming the story at all? Where is the cherished advertising value?"

Georgia Woodthorpe in Metro Special

Georgia Woodthorpe has been selected for an important role in the closing episode of Metro's colossal picturization of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," from the world-famous novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez. Miss Woodthorpe will enact the role of the old lodge-keeper's wife.

A cast of more than 5,000 will enact "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" on the screen. The picture is to be a Metro Extra Special de Luxe production. Alice Terry, Rudolph Valentino, Pomeroy Cannon and Edward Connelly are prominent among the principles. June Mathis scenarioized the epoch-making novel after several consultations with the author, Senor Ibanez, who has been hailed as the world's greatest living novelist. The production was directed by Rex Ingram.

New Tom Mix Picture Is "Prairie Trails"

There is every reason to believe, states the Fox office, that Tom Mix's newest William Fox photoplay, "Prairie Trails," which will greet the legion of Mix enthusiasts on December 26 will be just as pleasing from the spectator's standpoint and just as welcome to the exhibitor whose business is to coax coin into his cash register, and was this cowboy star's previous offering, "The Texan," "Prairie Trails" is a sequal to the latter production.

Kathleen O'Connor, who starred in "The Lion Man," a serial, supported James J. Corbett in "The Midnight Man," another serial, and played with Harry Carey in "A Gun Fightin' Gentlemen," plays opposite Mix.

Strong Cast Has Seitz, Caprice and Courtot

"Rogues and Romance," the first feature production starring George B. Seitz and June Caprice, is proving a popular attraction according to the indications shown in early bookings at the Pathe branches. Pathe will release the picture December 26th. Marguerite Courtot has an important role.

"Kismet" Scores in Two New York Neighborhood Houses

Fox's Audubon and Academy of Music Show Attraction to Big Business

PROVING that its record breaking run at the Strand Theater, New York City, only whetted the appetite of the metropolis for "Kismet," the Robertson-Cole super-special, starring Otis Skinner, continued triumphant this week at two of New York's largest neighborhood theaters, declares a statement from the headquarters of the Robertson-Cole organization.

William Fox's Audubon, at Broadway and 166th Street in the center of the Washington Heights residential district, and the Academy of Music, which lies on the edge of the populous East Side, are the two houses which played "Kismet."

The success won by "Kismet" in both houses was particularly gratifying to Robertson-Cole because of the fact that the two neighborhoods represent two distinct types of audience. Both received the super-special with enthusiasm, states Robertson-Cole, thereby proving the broad and diversified appeal of the picture, and incidentally carrying a further message to American exhibitors as to the adaptability of "Kismet" as an attraction for every sort of house.

Atmosphere of Oriental magnificence and mysticism was created in the big lobbies of the Audubon Theatre. The Audubon is managed by Ben E. Jacksen, who always has been "strong" for exploitation, and has proved its value at the box office.

In the exploitation of "Kismet," Manager Jacksen of the Audubon, who is known for his lavish lobby displays, went even further than is usual and used a wealth of genuine oriental trappings and antiques to bring the atmosphere of the Far East home to his patrons.

To start with Manager Jacksen had a canvass made of all property studios and antique shops in search of the proper "props" and draperies. Genuine Arabian and Turkish hangings were found to run into "big money," but an arrangement was finally reached where the genuine articles, valued at thousands of dollars, were obtained, it is declared.

Rich Turkish and Arabian draperies in profusion and of large valuation were used in draping the lobbies of the Audubon. Silk hand-woven "pull-downs," 25 feet in length, were used to drape all columns and eight hand-embroidered silken drapes were hung back to back across the top of the lobby, suspended from invisible wires. On each side of these drapes pictorial signs were suspended. Forty by sixty frames were used for hand painted signs, done by Frank Brown the special scenic artist employed exclusively for this work. These signs were real scenics and were done in purple, red and gold, in harmony with all other decorations.

One big sign in purple, red and gold and pictorially embellished was made to fit a space forty by four feet over the eight big doors leading into the theatre auditorium. This sign was so placed as to hit everyone who entered the theatre "right in the eye."

Heralds were distributed to the crowds in the lobby by Miss Gertrude McCarroll, a motion picture actress. She was garbed in the costume of a girl of the harem. The whole effect was one designed to bring the marvelous scenic beauties of the production home to theatre goers and get their interest and curiosity aroused to the fullest.

The Academy of Music, which once was New York's foremost legitimate theatre, and now is a large picture house with a seating capacity of over 3,000, carrying three galleries, and drawing probably the most Cosmopolitan audiences in America, put on much more elaborate exploitation than usual for "Kismet."

Outside, three stories above the ground, was hung a sign close to a hundred feet in length advertising Mr. Skinner and his famous screen play, and below it another smaller sign. These were attached to the outside of the fire escapes. On the Irving Place side, high above the busy crowds which flock through Fourteenth Street, and well within their vision hung other signs of like nature. These were put up a week before the opening which took place on Sunday, December 5.

Inside a very pretentious display went all across the large foyer. The lobby proper of the Academy of Music, which years ago offered New York its first opera, and which staged massive productions in which the most famous stars of the day appeared, is small. But every inch of its space was utilized by Walter David, manager of the Academy of Music, for the display of large frames of "Kismet" lobby photos.

The large foyer made up for the small lobby. Here Mr. David made a beautiful display. Each of the very large gold-mounted frames in the foyer was devoted to a hand-decorated card on "Kismet," in most places including the impressive head of Mr. Skinner in make-up. In every available corner were placed smaller cards which featured the announcement that Otis Skinner in "Kismet" would be seen the following week.

Throughout the populous neighboring parts of the lower East and West sides of New York which do their shopping and theatre-going on Fourteenth Street, Mr. David put out 25,000 postcard sized throwaways making a brief announcement of the picture which was advertised two weeks before, at the time of the Strand showing, by enormous advertisements in the fourteen leading dailies of New York City. Beginning Sunday, when a huge crowd stormed the Academy of Music, until the end of his run, Mr. David experienced the greatest business in years at his house.

Having watched the showings at the New York Strand, a national institution with a niche of its own among American theatres; the Brooklyn Strand, and the Goodwin Theatre, Newark, N. J., two typical first run houses in larger cities; the Rialto, Washington, a house of exclusive and national patronage; the Grand Opera House, Canton, Ohio, a typical Middle West house; and the two large New York City neighborhood houses above mentioned, Robertson-Cole declares that "Kismet in its three weeks has had a national test which has proved it the artistic, dramatic and box office attraction of the age."

"The Stealers" Reported to Be Big Hit

Robertson-Cole announces that Christy Cabanne's production, "The Stealers," is "scoring triumph after triumph" throughout the country. The following wire from Joseph Blechman, of the Garden theatre, Baltimore, Md., is submitted by Robertson-Cole as typical of the reception accorded to this production:

"Owing to popular demand we are holding 'The Stealers' for another week. My patrons say that it is the best picture they have ever seen. Breaking all previous records. Accept my congratulations on this wonderful attraction."

Exhibitors Commending "Slave of Vanity"

By the final test of the box office "A Slave of Vanity," the Robertson-Cole special, starring Pauline Frederick, is scoring in the bigger first run houses of the country, declares Robertson-Cole. Exhibitors are expressing themselves completely satisfied with the returns realized and the commercial and artistic merits of this, Miss Frederick's first of her new series of four super-specials a year.

Tom Mix, in "Prairie Trails," a Fox picture

Tom Mix in Fine Role in "Prairie Trails"

A statement from the New York headquarters of the Fox Film Corporation declares there is every reason to believe that Tom Mix's newest William Fox photoplay, "Prairie Trails," which will greet the great number of Mix enthusiasts on December 26, will be just as pleasing from the spectator's standpoint and just as welcome to the exhibitor as was this cowboy star's previous offering, "The Texan," "Prairie Trails" is a sequel to the latter production.

Many persons believe that "The Texan" is the finest picture Mix has done so far, and booking returns reported from the Fox contract department seem to uphold this belief. "Prairie Trails," it is promised, will be just as much to their liking for the second picture is by the same author. The story is regarded as equally absorbing, and many of the same characters who were in "The Texan" return in "Prairie Trails."

Virginia Valli Engaged for Paramount Cast

Virginia Valli, who is another of the beginners at the old Essanay studio in Chicago who has made good on the screen, was chosen by Director John S. Robertson for the characterization of Lady Alice Pipinworth in the special production of Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy," which he is making for Paramount.

"Two Moons" Due Dec. 19

Fox Says Subject Will Add Greatly to Popularity of Buck Jones

THAT the rapidly growing popularity of Buck Jones, the cowboy Fox star, will take another upward leap when "Two Moons," his latest Western thriller, is released, is the contention of the Fox Film Corporation. The production will be released on December 19.

Buck Jones has made rapid strides into public favor with his latest two pictures, "Sunset Sprague" and "Just Pals"—particularly the latter. "Two Moons" is said to give Jones his greatest opportunity thus far to combine his skill as a daredevil cowboy with his genuine histrionic talent. Thrills and love interest, of course, are the dominating elements in the picture, which tells a vigorous story of a romance that grew out of one of those historic feuds between the cattle barons and the sheep herders for control of the grazing lands of Wyoming.

Jones enacts the role of "Original Bill Blunt,' a cattle man, who complicates the existing tense situation between the cowmen and the sheep herders by falling in love with the wild and tempestuous daughter of a murdered sheepman. "Original" is a devil-may-care quick shooting character—just the sort who would appeal to the tigerish sheep girl. In fact, the girl can't decide for some time whether she hates him or adores him. At their first encounter she tries to shoot the man, as a cattle interest champion who represents in her view everything that is desirable.

"Two Moons" was adapted to the screen from Robert Welles Ritchie's western novel, "Trails to Two Moons," Edward J. Le Saint, the director, is said to have crammed his picture with situations that will interest every photoplay lover. As a foil to Jones' masculine masterfulness are the charms of Carol Holloway, who plays the part of Hilma Ring, a daughter of the sheepman's faction.

State "Nick Carter" Titles

Names of First Eight Two-Reelers Are Announced by Pioneer Film Co.

WITH everything in readiness for the release of the much talked of and extensively advertised series of "Nick Carter" pictures by the Pioneer Film Corporation, an announcement was made yesterday at Pioneer headquarters, 130 West 46th street, giving for the first time the titles of the first eight two-reelers.

The first "Nick Carter" picture will be released January 1.

The titles follow: (1) "A Cry at Midnight," (2) "The Mysterious Bond Case." (3) "Among the Counterfeiters," (4) "Nick Carter Down East," (5) "Birds of Prey," (6) "Sealed Orders," (7) "The Path of the Spendthrift," (8) "Dodging the Law."

In each of the two-reelers an all-star cast, headed by Tom Carrigan assembled by the Broadwell Productions, Inc., appears. Supporting Mr. Carrigan is Mae Gaston and Colin Chase. Tom Carrigan plays the role of Nick Carter while Mae Gaston fills the part of "Patsy" and Colin Chase, Nick's first assistant, "Chick."

Some idea of the interest caused by the production of the "Nick Carter" pictures, declare Pioneer officials, can be gleamed from the fact that the daily newspapers throughout the country are devoting considerable space to the subject, realizing the news value of a character representing an "institution" in fiction and that Street and Smith, the publishers of these famous detective tales, claim a circulation for their books of over 30,000,000.

The Pioneer Film Corporation has assembled a special staff at its headquarters for exploitation purposes and the "Nick Carter" pictures are in for some unusual stunts, it is stated.

Elinor Lynn, Ince beauty winner, who will succeed Thelma Percy as leading woman in White's Mermaid comedies for Educational release

New Leading Woman in Mermaid Comedies

Elinor Lynn has just been announced as the latest leading woman in Mermaid Comedies to be released through Educational Exchanges. Reports from Los Angeles promise that she will be a sensation.

Just seven months ago Joey McCreery was at her home in Salt Lake City, happy—except with the desire to become a motion picture star. Then she picked up a copy of a Los Angeles paper and noted that Thomas H. Ince was conducting a screen competition in co-operation with that paper. In Los Angeles she found herself one of the winners, and, after appearing at the Ince lot for awhile, she went to the Sennett studios. It was there that Jack White, supervising director of the Mermaid Comedies, found her.

Reports "Dice of Destiny" in Demand

Convincing testimony of the regard in which H. B. Warner is held by the exhibitor as a box-office attraction is furnished, says Pathe, in the bookings recorded on "Dice of Destiny," the new Jesse D. Hampton production in which he will star, up to a week previous to the date of release. Pathe branches report these to be notably large for any feature. A formidable list of houses that have booked "Dice of Destiny" is reported from the New York, Philadelphia and Chicago branches.

"The Furnace" Going Very Big

Exhibitors Commend Realart Release as Winner

"PLEASED patrons immensely" and "packed houses to the Limit" are typical of the comments which Realart's William D. Taylor production, "The Furnace," is exciting among exhibitors, declares official at the Realart home office in New York.

Skouras Brothers Enterprises controls six theatres in St. Louis. They are the New Grand Central, West End Lyric, Central, Pageant, Shaw and Arsenal. Recently, Skouras Brothers booked "The Furnace" for showings in all of its houses. The picture was first shown at the West End Lyric and the New Grand Central theatres, where it opened for a week's run December 6.

After the initial showing, Skouras Brothers sent the following wire to Realart:

"We are pleased to report wonderful results with your Taylor special, 'The Furnace,' at both our New Grand Central and West End Lyric Theatres where it started a week's run today. The best part of the opening of the engagement lies in the fact that it pleased our patrons immensely and words of praise could be heard on all sides."

A telegram from Detroit where the picture had a week's showing carries the same message of crowded houses and pleased patrons. "The Furnace" opened John Kunsky's two thousand seat Madison Theatre to great business," says this telegram of November 30. "Despite the fact that weather was abnormally warm and theatre attendance all over town far below normal, 'The Furnace' jammed the house to the limit and continuously held them out. Press reviews and public comment unusually praiseworthy."

Another message from the same source, dated December 2, says: "'Furnace' playing unusually consistent matinee business and holding them out night performances."

This telegram from the Rex Theatre, Oshkosh, Wis., dated November 26, speaks for itself: "Today last day showing 'The Furnace' biggest day of the run, crowds jammed our house afternoon and evening. Broke all house records with this feature. Heard more mouth to mouth advertising on 'The Furnace than on any picture we have ever shown. People laud its praises sincerely."

Meantime bookings on "The Furnace" continue to come in from all sections of the country, states Realart. The following theatres are among the more recent houses to book the pictures: Vaudette Theatre, Springfield, Ill., seven day run; La Salle Theatre, South Bend, Ind., four days showing; Orpheum Theatre, Gary Ind.; Mecca Palace, Saginaw, Mich., five days showing; Hippodrome Theatre, Lancaster, Pa.; Palace Grand Theatre, Glendale, Cal.; Godard's Theatre, Sacramento, Cal., four days showing; Fix's Auditorium, Shenandoah, W. Va.; U. S. Motion Picture Service, Boston, eleven days run; Orpheum and Liberty theatres, seven days; and Cozy Theatre Cleveland, and Jensen's Theatre, Pasadena, Cal., seven days showing.

Hoot Gibson in Five-Reelers

HOOT GIBSON, Universal's popular "western" actor, is to be starred in five-reelers, word comes from Carl Laemmle, president of the big film corporation, who now is at Universal City. A growing and insistent demand on the part of exhibitors and photoplay fans all over the country to seek Gibson in feature productions prompted the Universal chief to make the decision.

For more than a year. Hoot has been appearing in Universal's popular brand of two-reeel "westerns." For the past eight months or more he has been the only featured player in these productions, which are not the fire-eating, gun-play brand of "westerns" but homely or humorous plots laid in real western settings, with real western characters, such as one finds in the West of today.

It has been the Universal boast during the past, that no story is considered for a Hoot Gibson "western" unless it has plot enough for a five-reeler. Then it is boiled down into two-reels of pep and action.

Hoot is known as the "champion cowboy of the world." He won that title in the Roundup at Pendleton, Ore., in 1912, when he rode, roped and bull-dogged steers against such experts as Lou Miner, Eddie McCormick, Dell Blanchard, Art Acord and Ben Corbett. More recently, Hoot took the major prizes at the Los Angeles Stampede, held in Ascot Park, Los Angeles, in 1919.

The star is a native of Tekamah, Nebraska, where his father is in the grocery business. It was on his father's ranch near Tekamah that Hoot learned to ride. Later he ran away from home and joined Bud Adkins' Circus and Carnival of Rough Riders, going with that organization to Mexico, South America and Australia. He later became an automobile racing driver. During the war he served as top sergeant in the Tank Corps.

Hoot started with Universal several years ago, and was for a long time the juvenile lead for Harry Carey features. He also has done work for Vitagraph and other companies. He had an important role in "The Hazards of Helen," the Kalem serial pioneer.

It is likely that Gibson will shortly be included in Universal's regular release of five-reelers. His first picture is being selected now. Jacques Jaccard, well known for his success with such stars as Eddie Polo, Marie Walcamp, Tom Mix, Ormer Locklear, Frank Mayo and others, is slated to make the first Hoot Gibson special.

It is expected that his first picture will be released some time in March.

Tie-Up for Bill Hart Film

A Special Edition of Old Melody "Darling Nellie Gray" Arranged

COINCIDENTLY with the release of the next William S. Hart production, "The Testing Block," by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, a photoplay edition of "Darling Nellie Gray," the home song favorite of generations, will be issued by Jerome H. Remick & Co. The tie-up effected by the publicity and advertising department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation revives the popular song through its predominating influence in the plot of the next William S. Hart picture.

"The Testing Block" is a western story dealing with the fortunes of a reformed road agent, whose destiny is swayed by the mellowing influence of the song, vibrating from the quivering violin of a sweet faced girl.

Appropriately, the cover of the photoplay edition is illustrated with a large center picture of William S. Hart, surrounded by four pictures from the production. Credit is given to "The Testing Block" and to Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The music publishers are prepared to issue more than 50,000 basing their estimate on the popularity which the song has attained, enhanced by the connection with a popular Bill Hart picture. Inquiries instigated by the music house, when the subject of a photoplay edition was first broached, indicated such a wide demand for the song from their dealers that record sales are anticipated.

Through the booking offices of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation the music publishers will be advised of showing of "The Testing Block" and will be prepared, through their local dealers or through the exploitation representatives of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to aid exhibitors throughout the country in the exploitation of the picture by window displays.

Rapid Bookings for "813"

Robertson-Cole Release Starting Its First Runs to Big Business

ROBERTSON-COLE'S twenty-five branches scattered over the United States report rapid bookings for "813," the Robertson-Cole special, founded on the Arsene Lupin story of the same name and featuring Wedgwood Nowell. Prints are now in the branches, and this detective and mystery picture is starting its first runs in all parts of the country.

That there is an urgent demand for this type of picture became evident at first screenings, declares Robertson-Cole. "813" was selected as the best and most timely of the Arsene Lupin tales because of its great element of suspense, its vivid and telling international theme, and because of the baffling and mystifying series of incidents which compose it. Its timely element touches upon European intrigues, which have only been fully brought home to Americans during and since the World War.

Wedgwood Nowell, known as "the American Count" and "the most perfect Latin type on the American screen," is featured in "813," having the big role of his career. As he is cast as Lupin, his part required the greatest skill in alteration of appearance and in change of character, both of which Mr. Nowell accomplishes in a remarkable degree, says Robertson-Cole.

Other members of the cast are: Ralph Lewis, Wallace Beery, J. P. Lockney, William V. Mong, Colin Kenny, H. Milton Ross, Thornton Edwards, Frederick Vroom, Mark Fenton, Kathryn Adams, Laura La Plant and Vera Steadman.

Street Setting in Armory

London Street Scenes Taken for "Message from Mars" With Lytell

MAXWELL KARGER, director of "A Message from Mars," the forth-coming Maxwell Karger production starring Bert Lytell that is now being made at Metro's New York studios, took possession of the Eighth Coast Artillery Armory at One Hundred Ninety-sixth street and Fordham road on Monday of this week, to direct the filming of the remaining scenes of the new Lytell subject on the elaborate London street setting that has been specially constructed within the armory.

Preceding the arrival at the armory of Mr. Karger, Bert Lytell, the star, and the cast of "A Message from Mars," a whole brigade of electricians, carpenters and painters had been at work transforming the spacious interior of the building into a section of five London streets. These, when completed, represented several different sections of the British metropolis, extending from a prosperous residential neighborhood to the slums of the Whitechapel district.

The problem of obtaining a suitable location for the mammoth set that Metro planned to construct for "A Message from Mars" had occasioned Metro officials grave concern, until the expedient of utilizing one of the city armories was suggested. After a considerable search for an armory large enough to accommodate the entire set built to reproduce a section of London, the Eighth Coast Artillery Armory was selected and arrangements concluded whereby the building was leased for a stated length of time and the Metro force of workmen under M. P. Staulcup was put to work.

The set within the armory, as now completed and being used in filming the remaining scenes of "A Message from Mars," is complete in every detail as a reproduction of a great London street in winter.

Vitagraph Head in the East

Back From Coast With Negative of "Black Beauty"; Now Editing Film

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, arrived in New York last week on a trip which mostly concerns his newest big production, "Black Beauty." The negative of "Black Beauty" was brought East by Mr. Smith and the editing of the feature has been started at the Brooklyn studios of Vitagraph under the personal supervision of Lillian and George Randolph Chester.

"Black Beauty," the final scenes of which Mr. Smith supervised on his recent tour in the West, is expected to be Vitagraph's biggest production. It will be the fourth of the new series of specials offered by the company. It follows "The Courage of Marge O'Doone." "Trumpet Island" and "Dead Men Tell No Tales." The first named has already broken all booking records in the quarter century of Vitagraph history. The other two are following closely and when on the market for the same length of time may surpass the popular Curwood picture.

David Smith, the man who made "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," also directed "Black Beauty." He has interpreted accurately the quaint, homely story of the simple, wholesome characters in Anna Sewell's great book, and "Black Beauty" is expected to be his masterpiece. Director Smith has built the picture with deep regard for detail and the result is a beautiful story for persons of all ages.

Jean Paige will be seen in her greatest characterization, states Vitagraph, that of the little old-fashioned Jessie Gordon who will be remembered by all who have read the book.

James Morrison plays opposite Miss Paige and George Webb as the heavy portrays a perfectly drawn character. The remainder of the cast is made up of the best artists obtainable, all of national renown.

John Russell, world traveler and writer of short stories, has left New York for Southern California, where he will join the literary forces at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood under Bayard Veiller, director of productions. His trip West is in fulfillment of the contract he recently signed with Metro to contribute original stories for the Metro screen.

The spirited stories of John Russell, laid in the out-of-the-way places of the inhabited globe, are known to a host of readers.

Mr. Russell's signature to a Metro contract, as regarded by officials of the corporation, is bound to result in the production of stories of an altogether new type for the Metro screen.

Fritzi Brunette Opposite Frank Mayo

Fritzi Brunette will again be seen in Universal productions. After an absence of several years she recently returned to play opposite Frank Mayo in "Tiger True," which has just been completed at Universal City.

"Tiger True" is an adaptation of "Tiger," a story of the half-world from the pen of Max Brand. It was directed at Universal City by J. P. McGowan. In its supporting cast appear Walter Long, Eleanor Hancock, Al Kaufman, Herbert Bethew, Henry A. Barrows and Charles Brinley.

Gareth Hughes in Fine Role for Metro

Gareth Hughes has enacted a role for Metro in "The Lure of Youth," which he declares will be to the screen what his most important characterization was to the speaking stage.

"I never was more interested in a part," said Mr. Hughes. "I can hardly wait until the release of this picture, when I shall be able to view the results I have accomplished."

Two Realart Pictures on Single Program

Realart pictures played an important part in the program of Loew's Circle theatre, New York City, during the week of December 4, when two of the seven attractions were Realart productions. Wanda Hawley in "Her Beloved Villain" was the first picture on the list, and Alice Brady in "The New York Idea" closed the program.

Great Drive for "Lying Lips"

Hunt Stromberg and Seven Experts in Ince Campaign

THE Ince slogan—"Straight-From-The-Studios" Service—will be given a practical demonstration for the release, January 30, of Thomas H. Ince's second special for Associated Producers, "Lying Lips." According to an announcement made this week from the Ince studios on the Pacific Coast, a direct-to-the-exhibitor drive that will establish a precedent for scope and practicability will precede, accompany and trail the distribution of "Lying Lips."

Hunt Stromberg, director of publicity and advertising for Thomas T. Ince, will leave Los Angeles the latter part of December for a tour of the principal key cities personally to conduct a new idea in an exhibitor-newspaper cooperative enterprise, which, according to plans, the details of which will be divulged later, will insure the new A. P. production a record volume of feature newspaper space and "follow-up" broadsides.

Assisting Stromberg in the national campaign will be a staff of seven exploitation specialists. Bogart Rogers and Marc Lachmann, the former a newspaper man of wide experience, the latter a former newspaper man and exhibitor, will leave California simultaneously with Stromberg. Five additional men will depart during the first week in January.

Under this system, exhibitors of Thomas H. Inch-Associated Producers productions are guaranteed a minimum of four weeks' advance promotion and publicity, it is stated. The direct personal exploitation will continue, however, during the actual periods of presentation, it is explained, the advance trips constituting an extra "bonus" in the form of "direct-from-the-studios" cooperation.

Heading the list of "Lying Lips" campaign-features is a linkup with one of the prominent manufacturers of a nationally advertised commodity for women. The nature of the picture permits of this form of promotion.

Under the existing arrangements, more than forty full pages of rotogravure advertising, in which the copy and illustrations will advertise "Lying Lips," will appear in the leading metropolitan dailies simultaneously with the run of the picture, it is announced from the Ince headquarters.

One of the big episodes in "Lying Lips" shows the sinking of an ocean liner and its subsequent shelling by the U. S. battleship "Minneapolis," which was chartered crew and all, by Thomas H. Ince, the entire "Minneapolis" crew of some four hundred stalwart Jackies posing before the camera under the personal direction of Ince.

Special "publicity" stills of the sailors holding a huge banner reading: "We's in the movies now! Sunk a ship for Thomas H. Ince's vivid drama of life and love, 'Lying Lips,'" were made by the Ince publicity forces, and will be supplied exhibitors in 30x40 size for window display, lobby frames and for special exploitation by the sailors themselves.

Special lobby displays, several of them effectively illuminated; enlargements of portraits and scene stills; folders for advance direct-mail and audience distribution, and other practical promotional features will be included in the big campaign for "Lying Lips."

The Ince studios further report that an advance newspaper and magazine publicity campaign has been in progress since November 1. In the leading "fan" magazines on the stands in January will appear many news and pictorial features bearing upon "Lying Lips." Special feature stories also have been placed in the Sunday sections of some fifty newspapers, with a broadside of novel stills, on and off the stage, but all dealing with "Lying Lips," directed to the high-class rotogravure sections of the metropolitan press.

According to Stromberg, there is also a brand new idea for the use of the exhibitors in the smaller centers, where facilities for exploitation are limited.

"When the various plans and ideas for 'Lying Lips' reach the exhibitors direct, the industry in general will appreciate their practicability, and the selling force behind them," says Stromberg.

"Lying Lips' is now being cut and edited by Thomas H. Ince, who also directed many of the spectacular scenes which abound throughout the feature. It is described as a "vivid drama of life and love," with setting never before equaled on the screen.

"Public's Judgment Is Just"

Lasky Says Real Artist Need Not Fear Salary Cuts

"NO real artist need have any fear of a so-called handwriting on the wall, for the judgment of the public is sure and just," is the essence of a statement issued this week at Los Angeles by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president in charge of production of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. "The alarmists," he says, "may be numbered among those who are not sure of either themselves or their public."

Mr. Lasky's statement is in amplification of Famous Players-Lasky's recent announcement of the reorganization of its production forces into a super-star stock company, which, he says, is simply a definite working out of the company's policy of pleasing the public. The statement follows:

"The motion picture star must always be judged by his or her drawing power and paid accordingly. In the last analysis, the business of producing motion pictures is a business as well as an art and must be conducted along business lines if it is to succeed. Much as some might wish to subordinate all commercialism to art, it is impossible to do this and exist, unless art happens to meet with the approval of the final arbiters of all our fortunes—the public.

"Whoever it was who gave utterance to that ill-advised retort: 'The public be d——d!' was very soon answered by a great showman, who declared with even greater emphasis: 'The public be pleased!' Nor has anyone ever been able to succeed who purveyed popular or even specialized entertainment without making this the basis of his activities.

"That the judgment of the public is reasonably sure and just is proved, I think, by the fact that really great actors and actresses have maintained their positions and commanded handsome incomes. And the really great artist need have no fear—has none, in fact—because he is sure of himself and his public.

"The alarmists may be numbered among those who are not sure of either. They may see the handwriting on the wall if they feel themselves lacking in the essentials to popularity.

"I will not say that exorbitant salaries have not been paid to film players or stars. But these were the results of ill-advised efforts to force popularity or to outdo someone else in bidding. The moment the player received more than was commensurate with his drawing power the producer suffered in like measure. The road of film-producing is strewn with the bleaching bones of those who tried thus to disregard that cardinal principle of showmanship—'The public be pleased!'

"So far as Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is concerned, in its new upolicy to present all-star casts, or great pictures with several great actors and actresses in principal roles, it is simply advancing with the age and striving to give the public what it wants. These pictures will cost far more than the average production. They are written by foremost writers, acted by foremost actors and directed by foremost directors. They will be produced with every facility for perfect work and will mark a new era in motion picture making. The best answer to the rumors of salary cutting is the manner in which the stars and others concerned have accepted the idea. One and all have been enthusiastic and have realized the immense advantage accruing to all involved."

Plays Realart Release to Big Business

J. A. Maddox, manager of the Southern theatre, Columbus, O., has the following to say about William D. Taylor's special for Realart:

"Playing Realart's 'Soul of Youth' this week to exceptional business," says a telegram from Mr. Maddox, dated November 11. "This picture lends itself to wonderful exploitation possibilities. Suitable production for any house catering to high class patronage. Have made thousands of friends through this picture."

"Doug's" Latest Booked for Seattle Houses

"The Mark of Zorro," Douglas Fairbanks' new release, will open simultaneously in both the Clemmer theatre and the New Winter Garden theatre in Seattle, Wash., for a run commencing December 25th. This is said to be the first time in the history of the motion picture business in Seattle that the same picture will have a simultaneous run in the two big downtown theatres.

Records for Week Broken

New Record for a Week's Engagement Set Up by "Doug's" Latest

FOLLOWING the announcement last week that all known records for a single day's attendance and box-office receipts had been broken on the initial day of the showing of Douglas Fairbanks' "The Mark of Zorro" at the Capitol Theatre, New York, comes a statement from the United Artists' headquarters to the effect that the week's run of the production at the Capitol has hung up new records at the big house for total attendances and receipts. The picture is reported by United Artists to be proving a sensational box-office attraction everywhere that it has been shown.

The record of all records, however, is that of the Capitol Theatre, where, during the first week of its showing it was witnessed by a total of 94,501 persons bringing to the box-office the total of $48,-103.43. This, declare United Artists' officials, is considered to be the world's record for any one theatre for any one week for a motion-picture.

In writing Mr. Abrams, regarding the engagement at the Capitol Theatre, Samuel L. Rothapfel, who presented the production, said:

"I think perhaps you would like to know that in the week just ended with Doug's picture, 'The Mark of Zorro,' all attendance records for the motion-picture industry for a single week were smashed here. The receipts were $48,103.43, and the attendance was 94,501 persons."

On the Pacific Coast, at the Mission Theatre in Los Angeles, which was just opened, the picture also broke all records. Here is what Robert E. Wells, managing director of the Mission Theatre, wired Mr. Abrams:

"Los Angeles believes that 'The Mark of Zorro' is Douglas Fairbanks' greatest picture as evidenced by the fact that since Thursday, December second, when our new Mission Theatre, the finest appointed theatre in the world, was opened, we have played to absolute capacity, with midnight shows added both Saturday and Sunday. We have established two world's attendance records during these past four days with prices from fifty cents to $1.50. Thank you for this 100 per cent production. Hope more will follow."

"Jacksonville, Fla., as Third Producing Center" Is the Slogan

THE publicity inaugurated by the Motion Picture Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of Jacksonville is bearing results. A great number of letters have been received from producers who have become interested in the movement. Many of these letters show how little the North knows about Florida. Take the weather, for instance. One writer has an idea that you can work in Jacksonville but six months; that the summer months are unbearable; another, that the summer heat is too dry; another, that it is too wet, and another asks if anything else grows there besides palmettoes and moss.

If some of these letters were not written in a serious vein, showing a desire to be enlightened on the subject, one would think the writer was trying to be funny.

Now then, the truth of the matter is, it never gets as hot here as it does in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Washington, Cleveland, or even sections of New England. The temperature does not fluctuate as in northern cities—it is more even. Florida never has prostrations, and horses never have been known to drop in the streets of Jacksonville as they do in cities mentioned above, due to the heat. During the summer, temperatures do not average much above those of the eastern states and the Mississippi Valley. In fact, the average temperature for July, 81.3, is just 2.1 degrees above the average of St. Louis. No excessively high temperatures occur, such as are experienced in the northern and western states. A temperature as high as 106 was once recorded in extreme northwest Florida, but it is very seldom that the one hundred mark is reached in any part of the state, and the average maximum temperature for the hottest month is slightly below 90. This is due to the cooling breezes from the Atlantic and the Gulf, and to the frequency of thunderstorms in summer, which bring a sharp fall in temperature about the time of day when otherwise it would be hottest. The nights are comfortable, the maximum temperatures for the summer months averaging 70 and 75.

"The greatest point made in favor of Jacksonville as a southern headquarters for the motion picture producer, is the fact that it is only thirty hours' ride from New York City, the financial heart of the industry. The producer, at a glance, sees his great advantage of utilizing such a place as Jacksonville, because Florida has all the scenery and climatic advantages found in California. When a producer can leave New York on Saturday night at midnight and be in Jacksonville the second morning, that appeals to him as a practical help in being able to watch his company.

Gladys Walton, Universal's newest star, who is appearing in "Risky Business"

Universal has added a new star to its list, in the person of Gladys Walton, the little girl playing the stellar role in "Risky Business," a recent release. She is being exploited as "the typical American girl." She is still in her 'teens and plays schoolgirl and flapper roles. Reviewers who have seen "Risky Business" praise her naturalness in such characters.

The young star began her screen career scarcely more than a year ago, in Sunshine comedies. Universal engaged her several months ago to play a small supporting part with Lyons and Moran in "La La Lucille." Her work was so well liked in that picture, that she was re-engaged to play a slightly better part in "The Secret Gift." Then she was slated as one of the co-featured players in "Pink Tights." Her excellence in this picture won stardom for her.

Her first stellar vehicle was produced as "Risky Business." In it, Miss Walton absolutely established herself in the good graces of the Universal executives and won a regular place on Universal's release schedule of special attractions.

Cosmopolitan Production UnderWay

Robert G. Vignola's fourth special production for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, "Redemption Cove," scenarioized by Doty Hobart from Donn Byrne's story, is now rapidly nearing completion as to interiors, and sizes up as one of the best of the Vignola series, it is declared. Magnificent sets designed by Joseph Urban are one of the big features of this production. A well-balanced cast of well-known screen players, headed by E. K. Lincoln, Seena Owen, Lillian Walker and Cooper Cliffe, who play the leading roles, has been chosen by Mr. Vignola to interpret the characters.

Following the completion of the interior scenes, Mr. Vignola will take his entire company to the Bahama Islands for the filming of the exterior scenes.

F.I.L.M. CLUB NOTES

I. E. Chadwick was unanimously elected to the presidency of New York's F. I. L. M. club for 1921. This marks Mr. Chadwick's fourth consecutive election to this office. Upon being nominated Mr. Chadwick expressed a wish that his name be withdrawn, but those present refused to entertain his plea. The other officers elected are: S. Eckman, Jr., vice-president; Louis Rosenbluh, treasurer; S. Abeles, sergeant at-arms. In his speech of acceptance, Mr. Chadwick urged especially a policy of cooperation, pointing to the beneficial results of united effort in the past. Installation of officers will take place at the first meeting in January.

A standing vote of thanks was given the members of the entertainment committee, headed by Mr. S. Eckman, Jr., on the able manner in which they conducted the dinner and dance given at the Claridge on November 20.

Mr. Rosenbluh, chairman of transportation committee, was asked to communicate with all local film deliveries in Greater New York and New Jersey, cautioning them to be more careful in handling film to and from theatres and depots.

Critics Speak Well of "Half a Chance"

Newspaper reviewers in various parts of the country where "Half a Chance" has been showing have showered considerable praise on the production and the acting of the featured player, Mahlon Hamilton. Pathe, which releases this picture, submits excerpts from some of the newspaper reviews written in connection with this picture, as follows:

"Hamilton is splendid in the leading role," writes the reviewer for the Springfield (Mass.) Daily Journal. "He has never had an opportunity such as this play offers."

"From the very beginning," writes the reviewer for the Atlanta Sunday American, "'Half a Chance' takes a firm hold on your interest, which is sustained to the end. The director has made the most of each situation and developed some intensely dramatic moments in a highly colorful manner."

The Cleveland News-Leader reviewer writes: "This is a real picture, an inside view of the life of a real human being, and there never is a point in it where one will say, 'I wish they had done this differently.' From a simple hut to a big court room, it carries a love story so sweet and clean that it has your hearty approval from start to finish."

Vanity Fair Comedy Is Due December 12th

The beauty and talent of the Vanity Fair Girls and the amusing comedy antics of Eddie Boland make "Greek Meets Greek," released by Pathe December 12th, one of the funniest comedies yet produced at the Rolin Studios, declares Pathe. Eddie Boland is the featured player.

Vita's Special in Poli Houses

Elaborate Campaigns Held in Advance of Showings

VITAGRAPH tells how two of the Poli theatres—the Palace at New Haven and the Capitol in Hartford—advertised and exploited Vitagraph's special release, "Dead Men Tell No Tales." The New Haven house circused and heralded the attraction, while the Hartford theatre conducted an advance teaser campaign for the showing. Both houses registered capacity business for every performance, despite the difference in advertising and exploitation methods adopted, says Vitagraph.

The Palace theatre in New Haven readily lends itself to unusual lobby display, and Manager O. C. Edwards took every advantage of the opportunities offered by the Vitagraph picture, "Dead Men Tell No Tales" in two-foot electric lights letters was placed across the theatre at the third story and again across the portecochere; a six-foot cut-out of a traffic policeman stood in the center of the outer entrance with the slogan, "Stop!" "Dead Men Tell No Tales." Scenes from the play covered the walls in the lobby. The five alcoves in the circular foyer each contained an illuminated sign, green on black, with the slogan, "Dead Men Tell No Tales" with an out-stretched arm and hand holding a pistol, a dagger, a bomb, a knife, and a belaying pin respectively. Directly over the main entrance to the auditorium was a large illuminated sign with the word "Hist!" in large letters and underneath "Dead Men Tell No Tales."

New pose of Jeane Paige, who is playing the principal role in the forthcoming special Vitagraph production, "Black Beauty"

Manager James F. Clancey of the Capitol theatre in Hartford began a teaser campaign three weeks in advance of the engagement. He secured two hundred of the one-sheets supplied by Vitagraph containing nothing but the slogan, "Dead Men Tell No Tales" in white letters on black. He had five hundred one-fourth sheet tack cards and 10,000 small cards, two and a half by three inches, printed in the same style. The one-sheets and tack cards were given to a bill poster not regularly employed by the theatre with the instruction to get them out to the best advantage. This being done through a friend, the bill posters believed some government or national relief work was in progress and secured locations that otherwise would not have been available, and where, if the true import of the slogan were known they probably would not have been allowed to remain. The small cards were placed in every conceivable place—automobiles, hotels, newsstands and distributed on the street. Three weeks in advance Mr. Clancey began the teaser campaign in the daily papers using only the set of nine slugs in various sizes furnished by Vitagraph.

It so happened that the bill posters covered the broken walls and exposed vaults of the Hartford Trust Company building which was being demolished to make room for a new sky-scraper. This occurred at night. The result was so starling in the day light that the Hartford Times printed an editorial suggesting that the slogan would give visitors the impression that bandits had blown up the bank building and give Hartford a bad name but intimating that undoubtedly it was the work of a clever advertiser.

On the Saturday preceding the Sunday night opening, Mr. Clancey announced in the newspapers that "Dead Men Tell No Tales" was a big Vitagraph special production and that it would be shown on Sunday night for the first time at the Capitol Theatre.

Fine Shots in Anniversary Reel

Demonstrates Photo-Telegraphy in Pathe News

TENTH - ANNIVERSARY - ENTERPRISE particularly distinguishes the make-up of Pathe News No. 96, which combs the civilized world in its presentation of events of importance. Perhaps the most significant of these is the solution of the long baffling problem of photo-telegraphy — the practical transmitting and receiving of photographs over telegraph wires in ordinary use. Upon the announcement of the successful performance of this feat by the inventor of the system, Edouard Belin, in cooperation with the New York World and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Pathe secured the exclusive rights for motion picture demonstration of the process, it is stated. The picture was made under the personal supervision of the inventor, who exhibited and described his entire mechanism, and is first shown to the public as an exclusive feature of Pathe News No. 96.

The subject of the demonstration was the rugged face of an American Indian Chief. In motion pictures with short explanatory titles are described both the transmitting and receiving processes, with the mechanical devices used. The inventor is shown mounting upon a cylinder the original photograph prepared in relief. This is placed in the transmitting mechanism. As the cylinder revolves, a fixed needle point traces the relief outlines of the portrait. The motions of the needle, which is attached to the telegraph wire, causes variations in the force of the electric current. In the receiving apparatus, which contains a cylinder with a blank sensitized surface, the current thus graduated throws beams of light of various degrees of intensity. As this cylinder, confined in a dark receptacle revolves, upon its surface the lights and shadows of the original photograph are faithfully recorded. The result is a virtually exact replica — as the demonstration proved.

Other features of Pathe News No. 96 have up-to-date general news interest. When the U. S. Mine-Sweeper Swan was blown ashore on the New England Coast, the coast guard is shown rescuing sixty-two by means of the breeches buoy. It is a close and clear view of a very exciting scene. The first meeting of the League of Nations at Geneva with forty-one nations represented is pictured—including Japanese delegates, and the familiar face of Jan Paderewski, of Poland. Scenes of the football clash in which the Navy conquers the Army show among the guests, General Pershing, General Nivelle and Secretaries Daniels and Baker.

The anniversary historical review is an engrossing reminder of events of intense importance to this country. It shows the Accession of President Carranza of Mexico in 1914; the Mexican crisis of 1916 when, on March 9, the rifles of Villa's bandits killed American citizens in the border town of Columbus, N. M., and the start six days later of the U. S. punitive expedition of 6,000 men commanded by General Pershing. Both General Funston and General Pershing are represented in the review. The weary trail homeward out of the Mexican desert of the survivors who were to perform such brilliant service in France, concludes this fragment of important history.

Union Pacific Executives See the "U. P. Trail" and Endorse Picture

MR. R. MELCHER, Hodkinson representative in Omaha, worked out a clever exploitation idea prior to the release in his city of the "U. P. Trail," the great Benj. B. Hampton Production, made from Zane Grey's novel. Mr. Melcher sent an invitation to the various officials of the Union Pacific Railroad, the main office of which is located in Omaha, to attend a private showing of the picture. His letter to the railroad officials read as follows:

"You are invited to attend a private exhibition of the motion picture, "The U. P. Trail," to be shown at 4:00 P. M. Tuesday, November 23rd, in the exhibit room of the United Theatre Equipment Company, located on the northeast corner of 13th and Harney Streets. About an hour will be required to show the picture, which, by the way, was made from Zane Grey's novel of the same name, relating to the pioneer days of America and to the building of the Union Pacific Railroad."

It is interesting to note that Mr. C. R. Gray, president of the Union Pacific Railroad; Mr. E. E. Calvin, vice-president; and Messrs. Haugh, Adams, Loomis, Scandrett, Rich, Orr, Jeffers, Bissonnet, Huntley, Waldo, Robinson, Basinger, Mitchell, Lane and Craig—all executives of the road—were present. They were most enthusiastic in their praise of the picture and commended it highly not only for its historic value but as the very highest type of screen entertainment, declares a statement from the Hodkinson headquarters.

Has Wide Range of Scenes

Diversity of Setting Strong Feature of Mae Marsh's New Vehicle

THE wide range of scene, of interest, of action and of character is said to be a feature of "The Little 'Fraid Lady," starring Mae Marsh and soon to be released by Robertson-Cole. "The Little 'Fraid Lady" is adapted to the screen from "The Girl Who Lived in the Woods," a popular novel by Marjorie Benton Cooke, and was directed by John G. Adolfi. Its scene ranges from the simple homes of those who live in the Great North Woods to the woodland palaces of the rich who vacation there, and thence to the lair of thieves in the metropolis, to Greenwich Village at its most interesting, and to the courts of law.

While the diversity of scene, interest, action and character is very marked, the general effect does not suffer, states Robertson-Cole. The transitions are well-planned and executed, the coordination of action is perfect, and the great range of scene and action fits together to make a harmonious whole, it is stated. The effect attained is that one is looking upon a very large section of life which is so vivid and moving that even the smallest details are seen plainly and impressively, declare Robertson-Cole officials.

Miss Marsh is said to have been given a character which fits her more perfectly than anything that she ever has had. With Miss Marsh are Tully Marshall, Kathleen Kirkham, Charles Meredith, Herbert Prior and Gretchen Hartman.

Army Men See News Reel

General Shanks and Staff View International's Army's Scenes

MAJOR GENERAL DAVID H. SHANKS, commander of the First Corps Area of the U. S. Army, with headquarters in Boston, recently paid a visit to the offices of the American Feature Film Exchange, of Boston, where he was shown various issues of the International News reel, containing subjects of interest to army men.

General Shanks was accompanied by members of the staff, including Colonel George Blackely, Corps Inspector; Colonel Archibald Campbell, Assistant Chief of Staff, and Lieut. H. B. Smith, personal aid to the corps commander. Among the subjects run off in the exchange projection room under the supervision of Sam Grant, manager of the American Feature Film Exchange, were pictures showing mortar firing at Fort Andre, Mass., from International News No. 73, the American schooner Esperanto at Gloucester, from issue No. 74, mine practice in Boston Harbor, from issue No. 75, General Shanks and the Adjutants-General of the New England at the State House, Boston, from issue No. 77, and picture of Gen. Shanks pinning a Victory Medal on Col. F. G. Galbraith, National Commander of the American Legion, from issue No. 79.

General Shanks and his staff were highly pleased with the showing and expressed the opinion that the officers and men of the Army profit greatly by seeing, in the International News reels, what army men are doing in other parts of the country.

International recently has been working in co-operation with the Army Air Service in obtaining moving pictures of "stunts" and fighting formations used by the nation's bird-men.

A series of remarkable pictures were obtained, which were released in installments in International News reels, 77, 78 and 79. The most startling of these includes an air-raid on Washington taken from one of the raiding machines and pictures of the Capitol, the White House, the Washington monument, taken from an aeroplane looping-the-loop, high above them.

Call Serial "Super-Thriller"

Pathe to Play Up the Star in Advertising the "Double Adventure"

WHILE notes from the Brunton studios and the New York offices of Pathe, where the majority of the fifteen episode of "Double Adventure" have been screened, credit this new serial starring Charles Hutchison with being a notable example of screen love romance with the added stimulation of melodramatic thrills, the emphasis in the picture itself and in the advertising matter in preparation is placed on the "stunts" performed by the star, declares a Pathe Statement. It will be as a "super-stunt-thriller" that "Double Adventure" will be presented, is the announcement.

"In the long list of serial plays Pathe has offered none surpassed the mark established by 'The Great Gamble' as a stunt picture," declares Pathe.

"Double Adventure" will be Hutchison's first serial for Pathe since "The Great Gamble," and at the commencement of work on the new film at the Brunton studios, it was announced by the star and the company officials that every effort would be made to produce a serial of more thrill stunts Hutchison performs in

The number and variety of the stunts Hutchison performs in "The Double Adventure" have already caused no little comment by seasoned studio men, it is stated. The situations and the devices employed by Hutchison were given a deal of attention by Jack Cunningham, who wrote the story, and W. S. Van Dyke, the director. Cunningham, Van Dyke, and the star held long sessions together at which they collaborated on the situations and stunts for "The Double Adventure."

The star who is still suffering from the injuries he sustained in filming a retake for the picture, has received expressions of sympathy from people in all departments of the motion picture field, from exhibitors and countless numbers of his followers among the serial devotees. The accident seems the more unfortunate when it is considered that through all the work on "Double Adventure" he essayed dangerous feats daily without mishap, only to be the victim of severe and painful wounds received while acting for a "retake." His picture was completed before the accident, and it is to be released on schedule Pathe has announced.

Favorable Reports for DeHaven Production

Glowing reports are already being heard concerning the second Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven production for First National release, an adaptation of the comedy stage success, "The Girl in the Taxi," by Anthony Mars. This is now in the fifth week of production. Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation handles the comedians' Eastern business.

To date, all of the interior scenes have been caught by the camera, with one exception. The missing scene is an elaborate cafe affair, which because he desires to make this something entirely new and different from anything of the character ever brought to the screen, it is stated, Mr. De Haven has left for the last.

Special Service Section on

Mae Marsh in "The Little 'Fraid Lady"

IN looking over the exploitation angles of "The Little 'Fraid Lady" there are two things that stand out above all others: the return of Mae Marsh to the screen after a considerable absence and the title itself.

Our first bet would be to announce Miss Marsh and her picture well in advance of the showing by readers, reference to her booking in display advertising for current attractions and through the house organ and slides. We would remind the fans of her past successes, especially such pictures as "The Cinderella Man," "The Birth of a Nation" and others that made her a star of the first magnitude.

A little history of her career on your program, the reason for her temporary retirement, with sidelights as to her present sponsors will all be interesting reading for the fans. In our reference to Miss Marsh we would be enthusiastic about the fact that she is again a member of the craft. We would speak of her in terms that would recall her greatest stock in trade as an actress, the little whimsical tricks for which she is famous, her wistful smile, her ability to put over the "clinging vine" type of girl. We would sell Miss Marsh just as far as possible before exploiting the picture at all and we would head line her above everything else in all the publicity put out.

When it comes time to announce the picture, get the title and Miss Marsh's name up in big type wherever you can. For this purpose the 24 sheets issued by the producers will be worth your while. Stills from the picture, all of which give Miss Marsh a prominent position, can be used to good advantage. Suppose for your matinees you offer as a souvenir a picture of Miss Marsh, purchasing a supply for this purpose. If you go in for contests, you might offer prizes to the schoolchildren who will name the greatest number of pictures in which Mae Marsh has appeared. Or you might ask them to write a short poem about her under the same terms. Another interest builder would be an essay about the Marsh picture which your patrons liked best, giving their reasons. This would give you a line on the kind of stuff which appeals to the Marsh fans and also allow you to estimate how many people are going to be attracted to your theatre as a direct result of the fact that you will play her productions.

When you bill the attraction, in display advertising we would use a scene still of Miss Marsh alone and disregard any which depict action from the picture. Our first head would be "Mae Marsh," the title coming second, with selling talk just mentioning the story and also devoted to the star. For outside exploitation, we would not resort to anything that could be called "hokum." Treat the playing of the picture as an event with dignity in every bit of publicity you put over.

If you desire to use a lobby display you can not do better than to take the cue given by the picture and use paintings similar to the scenic settings of the production, panoramas of hills, with trees, etc., in the foreground and mountains in perspective. A stunt that would probably attract attention would be to obtain the services of a woman artist, doing the painting of your display in the lobby.

A prologue is suggested by the same idea of tieing up with Miss Marsh in the role she plays, that of an artist. Have your scenic artist reproduce one of the shots from the exterior of the cabin where Miss Marsh is living at the opening of the picture. Across in the distance paint the home of the "Judge," with provisions for the window to light up later. Mask one of your sides with the cabin in front and place a girl, painting before an easel, with a dog lying at her feet. Light in the beginning for late afternoon with dusk soon coming so that the artist must stop work. Your house in perspective should be well up on the canvass, with a road just showing, winding up to it from off stage. As the set is darkened, show the headlight of a car climbing the grade to the Judge's home. As the car reaches the house the lights flash on in the windows. The girl looks over at the house in silence. After a moment have a tenor sing softly from off stage, "Just a Song at Twilight," arranging the volume as if some one was singing the number at the house in the distance. After a few lines have been sung make the number a duet, while the lightings are gradually dimmed to night. With your stage dark, continue the song long enough to lower the picture screen and begin your picture, the first scenes of which will be the same as your prologue setting. Sound effects may be employed during the scene, such as the dull thud of a wood chopper coming across the valley, the hum of the motor car climbing the grade, the shifting of gears supposedly on some steep grade and notes of a piano accompaniment to the song, twitter of birds, before the set is dimmed, the mooing of a cow, etc.

Supplementary advertising angles other than the main issues of which we have told you are to be found in the cast, which contains such names as Tully Marshall, Herbert Prior, whom many of our older fans will remember as a star in his own right; Kathleen Kirkham, Gretchen Hartman and others as well known, the fact that the story has a good child part, played by George Bertholom, Jr., the popularity of the novel, "The Girl Who Lived in the Woods," by Marjorie Benton Cooke, and the director, John G. Adolphe, who has a number of very good pictures to his credit, including "The Wonder Man."

For newspaper selling talk we suggest the following:

Wistful eyed, winsome Mae Marsh, absent from the screen for nearly two years, back again in a role that just fits her. All the things you have always loved in her, the little tricks of expression, the twisted, woebegone smile, the repressed emotions that bring a sob to your throat and make her troubles seem real, are waiting for you. The Mae Marsh of "The Cinderella Man," of "The Birth of a Nation," back again in a real picture.

Your screen favorite, now and always, back after a long absence in a role that was just made for her. The story is an adaptation of the popular novel by Marjorie Benton Cooke, "The Girl Who Lived in the Woods." The direction is by John G. Adolphi and the cast contains such names as Tully Marshall, Herbert Prior, Kathleen Kirkham, Gretchen Hartman and Charles Meredith.

For what mysterious reason could a young girl want to bury herself in the woods with no company other than a dog?

The adults talked of her but it was the baby boy's intuition that his "'fraid lady was nice" that put them on the right track.

To most girls a thousand dollars would mean new dresses, etc., but to the "Little 'Fraid Lady," it meant that much food.

What was the judge doing at the bizarre Costume Ball of the Artists?

Why was the "little 'fraid lady" detained in the judge's home, practically as a prisoner, after she had saved his life?

She paid him to run away and escape from the law but revenge was sweeter to him than life.

He had popped the question and just as he expected his answer, a boy and a dog burst on the scene.

The return of Mae Marsh, the Peter Pan of the screen, in a role full of the whimsicalities that have endeared her to millions.

What were the relations of the "Little 'Fraid Lady" to the mysterious Giron and why did his lover try to kiss her?

Universal Ads Include Aids for Exhibitors

Universal has sounded a new note in advertising and exploitation, by including in its national trade advertising inserts, actual exhibitor aids and pertinent information designed to aid the exhibitors to present Universal pictures with maximum success. This is in accord with the plans of Universal's new exploitation department, headed by Mr. P. D. Cochrane, to stand by the slogan "Help the Exhibitor."

In the most recent issues of the trade publications, Universal devoted an entire page to exploitation ideas for popularizing the new Dorothy Phillips' film, "Once to Every Woman." This picture is said to offer unusual exploitation angles and to be doing a business far in excess of that anticipated by its producers.

School Principal Tells Why She Likes Star

Mary Miles Minter, Realart star, recently received a letter of appreciation from a Louisiana school principal.

"For some time I have been wanting to write to you and tell you how very much I enjoy your pictures," he states. "I have seen this week, 'A Cumberland Romance,' and 'Sweet Lavender.' The secret of your appeal to me is the naturalness and simplicity of your acting. You seem to lose yourself in the story, to become so wholly absorbed in your part that you live it on the screen as if you were not conscious of a single human being observing you. Have never seen you in a picture or scene which would have the tendency to lower the ideals of anyone who observed it. There is a winsomeness and a charm about you, and a natural, fresh idealism in your acting which will carry you to greater heights."

Manila Views Issued; Holmes Lecturing

Burton Holmes offered for release on November 21, through Paramount, a little tour entitled "Around About Manila," visiting Cavite, where Dewey fought and won his famous battle; Fort McKinley, where soldiers are trained; Antipole, the holy pilgrimage town where for the first time in history the famous figure of the Virgin, Our Lady of Happy Voyages, is brought forth from Her shrine into the open sunlight, that a clear and close-up likeness of this most adored of all the images of the island, may be carefully and reverently made.

Burton Holmes began his lecture season last week in the circuit which includes Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington and Newark.

Starring of Cook Approved

Reports to Fox Home-Office Prove Fox Right in Starring Clyde Cook

THE commendatory reports said to be reaching the home office of the Fox Film Corporation in connection with the reception accorded by the public to Clyde Cook, the new Fox comedian, are considered by Fox officials as conclusive proof of the wisdom and showmanship of William Fox in disregarding all tradition and making Cook a screen star at once instead of following the slower methods of advancing candidates step-by-step to stardom.

Concerning the change in the title of Cook's first comedy, it may be explained that "Kiss Me Quick" proved to be available after the comedy was initially shown at the New York Strand, Rivoli and Rialto theatres. The change to "Don't Tickle" was immediately decided upon, and an entirely new equipment of advertising, slides and title leads were supplied to all Fox exchanges. The comedy is now going successfully forward as "Don't Tickle."

"The Huntsman," second of the Cook comedies, is released following its pre-release showing at the same New York theatres where Cook secured his initial honors as a star in "Don't Tickle." A third comedy, "All Wrong," has been completed and will be issued early in January to start the New York for picture-showmen who specialize in the newest developments of the screen.

It will be recalled that Cook made his mark at the New York Hippodrome where he was chief clown and pantomimist with "Happy Days," the spectacle Dillingham presented last season at the big New York playhouse. Mr. Fox had seen Cook work in England, and there decided he possessed accomplishments that would register in screen comedies—but Cook's Hippodrome contract kept him away from pictures until "Happy Days" had ended its run.

Strive to Offset Dull Period

Chicago Office of Famous Players Combatting the Usual Holiday Lull

THE Chicago exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has undertaken what is described by Paramount to be an odd—and big—task for itself. District Manager Harris P. Wolfberg, studying conditions throughout his territory has found that a very large number of exhibitors feel that the period between the Sunday following Thanksgiving and until after New Year's is the "dull period" to be expected each year. Especially do neighborhood theater managers feel that the holiday shopping period is a bad one for their houses, declares the Paramount official.

So Mr. Wolfberg has mobilized every department of the Chicago exchange to help Paramount exhibitors combat the so-called "holiday lull."

Several exhibitors, last year, successfully met the situation by giving their patrons such good programs that they just had to attend. This example is to be followed this year by scores of exhibitors, judging by the booking department reports of Famous Players. Paramount exhibitors are setting in extra days of Paramount Pictures. The booking department is reported by Paramount to have prepared a list of especially appropriate pictures for the holiday term—pictures that reflect the spirit of Yuletide, appeal in their clean, wholesome amusement qualities, and many that especially are attractive to children. The booking department, under the direction of Chief Booker Hamm is giving especial care to the December bookings, helping exhibitors

Engage Russian Dancer For Metro Feature

As a special feature of the Christmas festival that will constitute one of the outstanding novelties of "A Message from Mars," the forthcoming Maxwell Karger production starring Bert Lytell, that is now being made at Metro's New York studios, Arthur Zellner, production assistant to Mr. Karger, has engaged the Vestoff Serova Dancers who will present a ballet that will be staged personally by Mme. Serova. The ballet will require special investiture and will occupy a set nearly forty feet in width.

The festival setting will also contain a mammoth Christmas tree which, at a given time, will open and a figure of Santa Claus will step forth.

Print of "The Spenders" Arrives from Coast

From the Benj. B. Hampton studios on the West Coast has just been received the print of "The Spenders," which is scheduled for release by the Hodkinson organization in January, 1921.

Heading the aggregation of artists is Niles Welch. Another favorite is Joseph J. Dowling, and Robert McKim lends his ability to a role for which his talents are admirably befitted. The story is by Harry Leon Wilson.

Louis B. Mayer Signs New Art Director

John D. Schulze has been added to the staff at the Mayer studio to supervise the work of the technical and art departments on all Louis B. Mayer offerings. These now include only the pictures starring Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin, but within a few months Mr. Mayer will add at least two all-star companies to film the James Oliver Curwood, Harold MacGrath and other stories and plays he has acquired, it is announced.

"High and Dry" Is New Mermaid Comedy

"High and Dry" is announced as the permanent title of the new Mermaid Comedy to be released in December through Educational Exchanges. The working title of this picture was "Luck," but it was found that another comedy has been released under the same title.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

Ben Wilson, spending a short time in New York, will be among the coast celebrities present at the Motion Picture Directors' Association dinner, at the Hotel Biltmore on December 7.

J. Searle Dawley, directing Pearl White in her fifth starring vehicle under Fox banner, has moved his company, bag and baggage, to "somewhere in Bermu."

Albert Parker, who directed Norma Talmadge in "Satan's Paradise," is at present engaged in "cutting" and preparing the picture for release. At the completion of which he will prepare to make more specials for Joseph M. Schenck.

Chet Withey, who has been making rapid progress on "The Man from Toronto," a screen adaptation of Douglas Murray's play, expects to get some beautiful exteriors in Miami, and he has promised to bring Constance Talmadge and her company back to New York in time to celebrate the Christmas holidays with their families and friends. The cast of "The Man from Toronto" includes such well known players as Kenneth Harlan, George Fawcett, James Harrison, Flora Finch, W. R. Webb and Florence Short.

Director Robert G. Vignola states Al Libuori, the popular cameraman who works at the International Film Studio, New York City, is the lineal descendant of a brother of Saint Alfonso Maria De Liguori, the lawyer-saint and doctor of the Roman Catholic Church who founded the Redemptorist Order of Priests. Mr. Liguori hails from Salerno, Italy, the natal place of St. Alphonsus, and in his possession is an authentic portrait of the saint on wood.

Wallace Worsley, who directs pictures for Goldwyn, says that one of the hardest things in the world now is to get any look of gayety into scenes where drinks are served. The memories of past pleasures are too sad. The other day while directing a New Year's reception in Gertrude Atherton's "Noblesse Oblige," he said:

"You know this isn't a funeral. Gather around the punch bowl. Try to remember how you used to feel on these occasions."

To which Darrell Foss made reply dolefully: "That's just the trouble! If we only could forget!"

Great interest is attached to the filming of "The Light in the Clearing," the first of a group of Irving Bacheller novels, the picturization of which will be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. T. Hayes Hunter, director of "Earthbound," "Desert Gold" and other notable sucesses, will be responsible for the direction.

Gaston Glass and Henry McRae, leading man and director of "The Foreigner" and "Cameron of the Royal Mounted"

George Marshall, who was responsible for the making of "Prairie Trails," starring Tom Mix and "Why Trust Your Husband," with Eileen Percy, is about to complete work upon another Tom Mix special which will be released under the title, "Oh, You Tex!"

Chester Bennett's latest achievement has been the completion of "Diamonds Adrift," starring Earle Williams.

When Charles Giblyn takes up megaphone again, it will be to direct Pearl White in his fourth feature photoplay for William Fox. The first three directed by Mr. Giblyn in which Miss White starred were "The Tiger's Cub," "The Mountain Woman" and "The Thief." During the time Mr. Giblyn has been obliged to devote to the cutting and assembling of the later two, Miss White has been engaged in her fifth picture.

King Vidor has completed "The Sky Pilot," from the well known novel by Ralph Connor for the Catherine Curtis Corporation. In this photoplay of the Canadian Rockies he infuses, according to those fortunate enough to witness a private pre-view, an elemental strength, a native vigor that conduces to a tonic quality, symbolizing the wild, wide places where man contacts the mountains, the great trees, the animal kingdom, and sleeps on the naked earth beneath the canopy of the sky.

"The U. P. Trail," a Benj. B. Hampton super - production, released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, is meeting with marked success wherever shown. It is an adaptation of the widely read Zane Grey novel of the same name and has an all-star cast including Robert McKim, Joseph J. Dowling, Kathlyn Williams, Marguerite De La Motte and others.

ABOUT PLAYERS

Another representative screen star within the the fold of the motion picture chapter of the Actors' Equity Association, Miss Ethel Clayton, who requires no identification other than her name.

Again the camera is grinding upon a new film in which Estelle Taylor will have the leading feminine role. It has not yet been named, but is said to be of an episodical nature, similar, in that it is in episodes, to the pronounced success, "While New York Sleeps." Miss Taylor's wardrobe list is most disconcerting. It calls for wearing apparel usually worn by the fair sex from the ages of fifteen to thirty-five, and in as many different walks of life. Evidently the director has every faith in Miss Taylor's versatility.

Will Rogers, who in addition to being a Goldwyn star ranks as the chief humorist of the company, was asked the other day to state his opinion of a proposal to cut down the salaries of stars. He sat down and dashed off the following:

"Naturally, every star will welcome the proposal to cut down his or her salary. This will relieve him of the burden of carting his wages home on Saturday night and of the trouble of book-keeping. Since we work only for our art, I think this movement will find wide approval from all those stars who feel they are overpaid.

"You also ask if the stars are to blame for bad pictures. Who's making any bad pictures?".

Rockcliffe Fellows, who plays a prominent part in "Pagan Love" the first of Hugo Ballin's independent productions, won much praise for his brilliant work at the picture's private screening, recently held at the Selwyn Theatre, New York.

In referring to the excellent acting of Fellowes, one reviewer said:

Margaret Beecher, featured in the Edw. Hemmer production, "Sunshine Harbor"

"Mention must be made of the splendid work of Rockcliffe Fellowes as the young medical student who finally restores Kathleen's sight and leads her through the portals of love."

The commendation which Fellowes receives has been endorsed unanimously by all who saw the premier showing at the Selwyn. A number of notables viewed the picture and all were in apparent accord as to the merit of the picture and the work of Mr. Fellowes.

This is just another success credited to this popular leading man, who already has the distinction of never having appeared in anything but a successful photoplay.

He is now working at the new Famous Players studio in Long Island City, where he is playing opposite Ethel Clayton in "The Price of Possession," the Winifred Boggs' story. This picture is said to be one of the best in which Miss Clayton has yet appeared.

Fellowes has supported her in several of her most successful vehicles.

Master George Story, aged six, happened to enter pictures really on account of Santa Claus. Every time Master George got 100 on his examination papers in school he insisted on giving his Daddy a list of the things he expected Santa Claus to bring him. The first month the list only had a big two-wheel bicycle. The second month he added a few more toys, such as boxing gloves, a tent and fishing rod with a reel on it so he could wind the fish in, instead of the old-fashioned way of just pulling them in. He continued to add to this list with each examination that was marked 100 per cent—so finally his Daddy made an appeal for him not to take all Santa's toys as he would not have enough for other children if he received all he asked for because it took a lot of money for Santa Claus to buy the materials.

Master George, not to be outdone, said he would work and get a lot of money and give it to Santa to buy materials to make a lot more toys, and then he would have enough for all. His Daddy then asked him where he thought he could get a job. George very quickly answered and said: "Why, from you. You can give me a job in pictures." His father, who is a casting director, laughed at the idea, and said: "You will have to look somewhere else, because we have no pictures that require children of your age, at present;" but George insisted and each evening he would ask his Daddy if the Company was making a picture that would need a boy like him. But luck was with George. When Albert Capellani, director for Cosmopolitan Productions, started casting "The Inside of the Cup," he needed a six year old boy, and as he knew Master George he insisted he was just the type, and after looking over numerous applicants, he decided none of them would do, so he persuaded the boy's father to let him play in this picture, so George was engaged to play the part of the Garvin child in "The Inside of the Cup."

Robert Edeson, who has just completed his role with May Allison in "Are Wives to Blame?" has received a long anticipated letter informing him that the ten German shepherd dogs he gave to the Washington government soon after the beginning of the war are safe in Germany. These animals were raised and trained by Mr. Edeson and two of them were decorated during the war. The letter informing him that the dogs were safe and would soon be returned to the United States is the first word Mr. Edeson has had from them since their "enlistment" in the government service.

Having just completed working on "Out of the Chorus," in which she played the leading female role next to the star, Edith Stockton is conducting negotiations with one of the leading producing organizations in regard to going West to this company's California studios. In accordance with the present trend to build up stock companies, Miss Stockton has been approached by these producers through the insistent high merit of her screen characterizations.

In "Out of the Chorus," Miss Stockton plays the part of a pal to Alice Brady—they are both chorus girls sharing the same room and board, working in the same show and even striving for the love of the same man. It is a very unusual story which depicts most intimately the off-stage life of the lesser people of the footlights, and gives Miss Stockton an unusually wide field for the display of her dramatic talents.

Marion Davies, upon her return from the coast upon the completion of her latest Cosmopolitan picture, immediately started in to adjust her affairs, beginning with joining the motion picture chapter of the Actors' Equity Association.

Players under the management of Edward Small, who have not already met Regina B. Kruh, popular personal press representative, will find her snugly settled down to become one of the Edward Small staff, Miss Kruh being assigned the work of keeping the industry and other interested parties informed as to the activities of Mr. Small's clientele. Needless to say, Mr. Small is to be congratulated upon this worthy addition to his services.

Irvin V. Willat signed Jack Perrin by special loan arrangement with Universal for the leading male role in his second independent production, "Partners of the Tide," from Joseph C. Lincoln's story, playing opposite Daisy Robinson, scheduled to be the "heroine in the case." Mr. Perrin was recently seen in "The Adorable Savage," "Pink Tights," "The Lion Man" serial for Universal and in Edgar Lewis' "Lahoma."

Mr. Willat has just returned to the National studios from San Francisco, where he "shot" a number of preliminary water scenes for this new special, which will follow "Down Home," his initial independent production under the W. W. Hodkinson banner.

Upon a final vacation before beginning athletic and motion picture activities once again, George Walsh is spending a few days "by the sea" in Atlantic City. And upon his return, the announcement of a recently duly signed contract will inform the industry regarding forthcoming feature photoplays starring the popular actor and athlete.

Rubye DeRemer, who more than three years ago, was declared by Paul Hellau, the Boston etcher of merited fame, to be "The Most Beautiful Blonde Since Venus," which conclusion he formed from a "long shot view," being in the front of a house where Rubye was playing in musical comedy, has altered his decision, much in favor of the acknowledged beauty by acclaiming Miss DeRemer "The Most Beautiful Woman in America." This from a "close up," for in the meantime, he has made the acquaintance of the astronomical beauty.

Gordon Mullen, who has recently come into prominence through his characterizations in "Nomads of the North," "Crooked Straight," "The False Road," "Dangerous Hours," "Paris Green," and "The Mark of Zorro," has been signed by Irvin V. Willat to play in "Partners of the Tide," his second independent production to be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"The Silver Lining," the initial Jewel Carmen production with her own company, which will be released through Metro, will have Virginia Valli in the leading female role among the supporting cast. Miss Valli will be remembered for her excellent work opposite George Walsh in his latest Fox release, "The Plunger," in which she displayed her comedy talents. The most recently finished production in which Miss Valli will be seen is "The Better Way," a forthcoming Hope Hampton film, that gives this popular young leading woman an intensely dramatic role.

At present Miss Valli is creating the part of Lady Alice in the John S. Robertson picturization of "Sentimental Tommy" by Sir James Barrie. One of the unusual features of this characterization is the fact that Miss Valli has had to cover her own jet-black hair with a blonde wig that is called for by Barrie's description of Lady Alice.

"The Broken Gate" is the title of Bessie Barriscale's first picture to be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation under her new contract with J. L. Frothingham. Supporting Miss Barriscale in this picturization of Emerson Hough's well-known novel are Joseph Kilgour, Sam De Grasse, Marguerite De La Motte, Arnold Gregg and Lloyd Bacon.

Cullen Landis, of the Goldwyn players, says there is nothing in the world which is better fun than going out to collect eggs from your own chicken farm. He knows whereof he speaks, too, for he has now a very large number of chickens working for him.

He started with only a few prize chickens, but he became so interested in them and he found it so good to have all the fresh eggs he wanted that he kept buying more and more until now he says he will have to buy a large ranch or dispose of some of them.

Mr. Landis says he has read every book published about poultry (or at least he thinks he has) and that he feels qualified to lecture to agricultural associations on his hobby.

Percy Marmont, who created the leading male role in "Dead Men Tell No Tales," and has appeared opposite a number of the important female stars of the screen, rises to prophecy the reappearance of the costume picture. "The box office bugaboo against these productions has been shattered on several occasions—most recently by Douglas Fairbanks in 'The Mark of Zorro.' The point is to give the people a story that has meat to it; then the clothes will not matter, if they are subordinated to the plot — the usual trouble with costume pictures heretofore is that directors have spent too much on the costumes and too little on the story proper."

There is, in fact, a consistent rumor that Marmont will create the titular role in a picturization of "Caius Gracchus," a poetic drama by Odin Gregory, laid in Rome about 120 B. C.

Lloyd Bacon, son of Frank Bacon, author and star of "Lightnin'," appeared in support of Joseph Dowling in "The Kentucky Colonel," a Hodkinson picture will also appear in "The Broken Gate," another Hodkinson release.

Is Laugh Making Serious Work?

THE most serious business in the world is that of making laughs, states Elmer Harris, co-author of "So Long Letty" and "Canary Cottage" for the speaking stage, and scenarioist of a score of filmdom's most successful comedy dramas. Mr. Harris was recently appointed supervising director of Realart's West Coast studios.

"Comedy is entirely a matter of contrasts," declared Mr. Harris. "The differing things of life can always be grouped together to get a laugh. But there is a difference, after all. The grouping can be done in a way that offends. That is impertinence, and impertinence is never comedy, for a laugh that hurts is a laugh that invariably reflects back on the maker. True comedy is a contrasting of life's incidents in a way that both parties to the contrast can thoroughly enjoy.

"To 'kid' a serious thing," continued the comic playwright, "one must know seriousness. One must know the situations sufficiently to sense where fun leaves off and impertinence begins. There is always a point where the person laughed at stops laughing with you.

"An excellent example of this danger line occurred in 'Miss Hobbs,' which I adapted for Realart. Persons who have seen the photoplay will recall that fat Walter Hiers runs the whole length of a lawn on which the automatic water sprinklers have been turned loose.

"That scene drew a lot of laughs, and it offended no one for fat men are noted for their good nature. But supposing we had used a pathetic beggar woman type for the same scene. It would have caused offense because there would have been many people in every audience to whom the incident would have appeared in poor taste.

"Thousands of other incidents occur every day to support the well-known premise that the best comedy is produced by people of serious thought—who know just how far to go. It happens that my own first efforts in writing plays were in a distinctly serious vein. 'The Crucifixion,' which I wrote first, was a religious study; 'Trial Marriage' treated of divorce, while 'The Offenders' was the first effort to put on the stage Judge Lindsey's work in reforming boys.

"As one grows older, however, there comes an appreciation of cheerful things—the realization of the true restfulness of a good laugh in the life of a busy man. People like to laugh, and a thoughtful play, with no comic relief, is usually a bore. And so it was that I came to take up the writing of comedy.

"But even in screen work I have not been altogether a funster. After adapting 'Miss Hobbs' for Wanda Hawley, I turned to a serious vehicle, 'All Souls' Eve,' in which Mary Miles Minter appears. This story treats of the return of the dead.

"It was a real pleasure to work out the problems of this adaptation for no thoughtful person, who looks out at the heavens at night and sees the myriads of worlds, can help but think on the subject of where we came from and whither we are going.

"Such a serious interlude was followed by a return to comedy in the adaptation of my own play, 'Ducks and Drakes,' prepared as a Realart vehicle for Bebe Daniels.

"I simply mention these cases as an illustration of the old saying that near every laugh lurks a tear. Comedy and seriousness are bedfellows during life. To treat of one it is essential to know the other."

"Miss Hobbs" is Wanda Hawley's first Realart picture; "All Souls' Eve," featuring Mary Miles Minter, has not yet been released.

From Barnstorming to Leading Roles

ROBERT FRAZER, who plays the part of the young profligate, Marlowe, in the George D. Baker production of "Temple Dusk," that is now being made for S-L Pictures at the Metro studios, furnishes a typical instance of climbing the ladder from the bottom to the top; for Mr. Frazer is an actor who began his stage career in the humblest of barnstorming circumstances, and step by step mounted to the enviable position of being one of the most popular of young leading men on the American stage.

The portrayer of the picturesque role of Marlowe in "Temple Dusk" began his theatrical career in 1907. And as the stage had from earliest infancy been his controlling interest, he decided to take it up in earnest and to become an actor at all costs.

This decision led to his obtaining an engagement with a stock company in Holyoke, Mass. Realizing that his total ignorance of the stage might prove a barrier to his finding employment there, Mr. Frazer hunted up an old program that he had brought back from the Coast, and going to a printing establishment had them make a duplicate of the play bill, substituting his name in place of the juvenile lead's. The scheme worked, but the career of the young leading man which promised so favorably began at this point to look bad indeed, for the next few months saw him stranded with the Cosgrove Stock Company in Carthage, N. Y., where he subsisted for three days on a ten-cent can of baked beans. Conditions improved shortly afterward, however, and the succeeding years found Mr. Frazer in leading stock companies throughout the country, including Jessie Bonstelle's, Cecil Spooner's, and the Washington Stock Company.

An engagement in pictures followed this career on the stage, with the Eclair Stock Company, a producing organization which made all manner of pictures. Following this initial appearance on the screen, Mr. Frazer returned to the stage, where he played the title-role in "The Wanderer" following William Elliott, the tile-role in "Ben Hur" and leading parts in "The Show Shop," "Rio Grande," "Excuse Me," and "The Million," the latter two of which were for Henry W. Savage.

Returning to pictures, Mr. Frazer appeared with Clara Kimball Young in "The Feast of Life," and with Holbrook Blinn and Alice Brady in "The Boss." His next appearance on the silversheet was with Mabel Taliaferro in "The Light of Love," and with Florence Reed in a special production that has not as yet been released. Another stage engagement followed this second appearance in pictures, consisting of a season with Julia Arthur in "Seremonda," in which he appeared as leading man.

Mr. Frazer was then engaged by George D. Baker, director of "Temple Dusk," for the role of Marlowe, the young profligate who finally redeems himself in the gripping story of the play. "Temple Dusk" was adapted to the screen by George D. Baker from Calvin Johnston's feature story in the Saturday Evening Post. In addition to Mr. Frazer, the all-star cast includes Anna Q. Nilsson, the featured player; Robert Schable, who will portray the part of Bunny Fish, Thomas W. Ross and Frank Currier. Andre Barlatier, the cameraman who photographed "Earthbound," is photographing the production. The art interiors are by M. P. Staulcup.

Hemmer Production Near Completion

"There are many important details to consider," says Edward Hemmer, "in getting a production ready for the market. After the footage is turned over to the cutters, the work of getting a smooth running picture begins. Handling footage in the cutting room requires the services of intelligent and painstaking individuals."

"When you see pictures where the story follows in pleasing and natural sequence, you can credit the cutters with preserving the director's best work and following the outlined continuity.

"A great deal of time and thought have been given to another important feature, that of selecting titles, the constructing and phrasing of which must be in pleasing complement to the object matter of the picture.

"Brush artists also play an important role in the picture making of today. Well-known artists are daily being called upon to reproduce famous subjects of the old masters, and to supply original ideas for art titles.

"Only experts in these lines," continued Mr. Hemmer, "are handling 'Sunshine Harbor,' the picture in which I am featuring Margaret Beecher, and am now getting ready for an early release."

Baker Completes a Record Year

George D. Baker, upon the completion of his present special production, "Temple Dusk," rounds out the most successful year of his directorial career. Mr. Baker's reputation as a director of splendid box-office successes has been strikingly illustrated by his product of the last twelve months, each one of which has been conceded to be better than his previous picture. The first George D. Baker production of the last year was "The Man Who Lost Himself," which feature marked William Faversham's entry into the motion picture world. This feature was followed by "Buried Treasure," starring Marion Davies, then came two special Cosmopolitan productions, "Heliotrope," which has just been released, and "Proxies." In all of these productions, Mr. Baker selected the story, wrote the continuity, directed the picture, and cut and titled the completed film, thereby making all his productions, one hundred per cent Baker features. The last Baker product of the season is the Calvin Johnson story, "Temple Dusk," which will be released by Metro under the auspices of the Sawyer-Lubin organization, as a special George W. Baker Production. Mr. Baker is confident that in "Temple Dusk" he has the best picture that he has ever produced. Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin have given him every possible co-operation in the endeavor to make "Temple Dusk" one of the greatest box-office attractions of the motion picture industry. Mr. Baker will complete the actual direction of "Temple Dusk" by December 15 and will have the feature cut and ready for distribution by the last of this month. The coming year will mark even greater strides in the making of George D. Baker productions. Mr. Baker is now actively at work upon plans for the production for elaborate pictures during the coming year from the pens of three of our most prominent authors whose names will be announced shortly after the release of "Temple Dusk," as in the past these features will be released as George D. Baker productions with all-star cast.

"Discoveries" in Storm's First Gish Pictures

BELIEVING there is more good acting material in the college class rooms than have been discovered by agents and casting directors, Jerome Storm recently set forth on a tour of talent-discovery and as a result has two promising young players under his direction in the first Lillian Gish production.

Always an exponent of naturalism rather than hectic histrionism, as demonstrated by the Ray pictures he directed, Mr. Storm was unable to find among Broadway actors just the types of youth which he desired for important parts in his first production for the Frohman company. He commenced a tour of schools about New York, and at the Alviene school of dramatic art met Miss Una Merkle, who was precisely the type he was seeking to play the role of sister to Miss Gish. His other discovery is Clifford Sharp, a young college man of breeding and distinction.

The aptitude shown by both young people and the intelligent manner with which they have responded to direction causes Mr. Storm to predict rapid advance for them in the film world. They also substantiate his belief that camera experience is by no means a prime requisite for consideration in casting a picture.

"College boys and girls should seriously consider the motion picture industry when contemplating careers," observes Mr. Storm. "The industry has been advancing faster than it could obtain skilled workmen. Men and women of trained minds certainly are needed in all departments of the industry. Considering the magnitude of the business and the remuneration of employes, I see no reason why college people should not consider the motion picture as a prospective profession as well as medicine, law or journalism. The screen does not require as much vocational training as the stage, because the former requires so much time for vocal training. But what the screen does need is alert, trained minds—particularly young men and women of refined deportment and personal distinction. Technique is quickly grasped by such students. Both Miss Gish and I believe that Miss Merkle and Mr. Sharp are genuine 'finds.' Their understanding and adaptiveness is far greater than that of many players having years of experience."

When he returns to California to undertake his next production, Mr. Storm intends to inaugurate a series of camera tests, such as those recently conducted with success by Thomas H. Ince. All screen aspirants having proof of academic training will be given an opportunity to try out.

"To the Manner Born"

BORN to the screen, was golden-haired Beulah Frances Miggins, infant daughter of the Michael M. Migginses of the William Fox West Coast forces. Beulah appeared in screen productions when she was ten weeks old, some time before she decided that comedy was her forte.

Her first role was in a Virginia Pearson production bearing the Fox brand. Her parents let their infant be "carried on"—and in films, for the most part of the time, she has been carrying on ever since. To be sure, she's only two years old right now—or a little over—for she was born in New York October 4, 1918, when her father was (and he still is) an assistant to director J. Gordon Edwards.

Beulah is half a twin. Her little brother died when he was only eight weeks old—but Beulah started right in to make film fame for herself—and the other half of twindom which she represents in Fox Sunshine Comedies, after a nine-pound start on the day of her advent in this vale of celluloid and "emoting." In her very first screen appearance she made little display of talent—the part was too small for any actress to show her real gifts.

But in William Farnum's "Heart strings," when she was one year old, Beulah really acted in what her parents declare was the largest part so young a lady ever appeared in. She was not just "seen" in the picture—she was decidedly "heard" around the studio and helped measurably in "making" the photoplay.

And forthwith she preempted the rights of full stardom by taking down with a sickness that required a stay in the hospital. An operation was performed (needless to say with success, for isn't this all about Beulah alive and acting?) in a hospital near the Audubon theatre, New York, where, in his own house, William Fox at the time was showing William Farnum in "Heartstrings."

And right there Beulah exercised another right by "stealing the show" from her star, so far as concerns doctors, nurses, cleaners, internes and every last individual around the hospital who could get away to see their little patient in full histrionic. Incidentally it will be plainly seen that she's now going further along with her "rights"—she's stealing publicity at the present age of two years, her present weight of 27½ pounds, her present height of 32½ inches and a chest that makes the tape meet at 18.2 inches.

Her head was exactly the circumference of her chest when the William Fox publicity man slipped this story to the editor. Make your own bets as to whether her head or chest will swell the most when she reads her story in print. There are lots and lots of wonderful things still to be said about Beulah as a babe—and is likely to hold as she proceeds in her chosen profession.

Just now "Beulah Frances Miggins" is too long a name for electric lights. Otherwise William Fox would doubtless put it there.

Studio Architecture As Haas Sees It

REALISM, line and color embody the cardinal principles of motion picture achitecture, according to Robert M. Haas, art director for Paramount Pictures made in the Eastern studios. In recent years this form of architecture has taken definite proportions and has become a recognized branch of the profession. Motion picture producers once thought that only a scenic painter and canvass were needed to make a picture, but with the rapid development of the industry achitecture has become a very necessary part of the successful and popular motion play.

"Architecture and decoration are nothing more than the expression of the character of the people of the times," said Mr. Haas. "We had no documents or books to tell us of the mode of life in ancient history, so ruins were dug up and the character of the people was judged from these buried treasures.

"In motion pictures one of the first things we try for is realism—the expression of the character of the people in the story through the background. Such a setting enhances dramatic value and adds to the interest of the picture."

"A good design is nothing but symmetry of interest. In the big sets we get balance by inserting an interesting little mass. The big thing hits the eye first, but the little mass helps to divide the focal interest. The camera has its limitations, as every one knows, and the composition of the background has a great deal to do with the finished picture which appears on the screen. The camera distorts and this is corrected by throwing into the background vertical, accidental lines that are offset by the horizontal mass.

"Color plays a secondary part in motion picture settings," according to Mr. Hass, "but is essential for its pleasing effect on the actor as well as the eye of the audience.

In summing up the part the architect plays in the production of good motion pictures Mr. Haas said that it was simply a case of picturizing homes to the public and building dramatic values on realism, with simplicity, taste and ingenuity as the guiding factors.

Mayer, "and complying accordingly, all her future pictures will be released under the name of Mildred Harris. It has always been Mrs. Chaplin's wish to use her own name, which she had already made famous.

"Mrs. Chaplin feels," continues Mr. Mayer, "that it has never been fair either to herself or to Mr. Chaplin to make use of the name of Mrs. Chaplin in connection with her motion picture activities. She feels further that the success which she has attained and the success to which she looks forward in the future, is and should be due to her own personal efforts and ability, and not to her association with any other member of the motion picture profession.

No Draperies of Any Sort Used in Castle Theatre, Eugene, Oregon

Interior Treated to Carry Out Castle Type of Architecture

SAID to be the prettiest theatre of its size in the State of Oregon, the Castle theatre, rebuilt at the cost of $28,000 and with a seating capacity of 650, opened its doors to the City of Eugene last Monday evening.

The Castle theatre derives its name from is general style of architecture, designed by its owned, A. H. MacDonald, one of the few film men in the state who can claim more than 15 years' experience in the industry. Its exterior is of white stucco plaster in imitation of the old stone castles of the European continent. Two office suites occupy the upstairs of the theatre building and on the outer side of the front window of each of these suites, is an old-fashioned turret. These turrets with the parapet or battlemen of self material which decorates the top of the building, are the distinctive exterior marks from which the Castle derives its name.

In contrast to the old world touch of the exterior modern devices and appliances as well as the dernier crie in luxurious conveniences, is the interior of the new Castle theatre.

The lobby is small but so arranged as to have all the appearance of depth and width and to have all the roominess of a less scientifically though larger "front." The built-in three-sheet cases on either side of the lobby walls conserve room and add to the general neat and modern effect. The ticket box is located in the center of the lobby between the entrance and exit doors. Ample space is left for any cut-out figures which Mr. MacDonald may care to use in varying his lobby advertising.

At the south of the lobby, in fact past its last graceful curve, is a window looking back into a space some five feet deep and four feet wide directly off the street. Here Mr. MacDonald plans to build his still "atmospheric" scenes. The space may be used for a small stage depicting some scene in the picture playing. It may be used to house a particularly effective three-sheet. There are hundreds of uses which may be made of this space that will result in perfectly good money being paid in at the window and Mr. MacDonald plans to use each and every one of them, varying them continually so that the good townspeople of Eugene, Ore., will always look to see what new stunt is being pulled as they traverse Willamette street each day.

Decorations of the lobby carry out the same idea as does the interior of the theatre. "Art noveau" work has been used to brighten the pjearl gray smooth paint which covers the plaster walls. A silver motif has been used as the predominating color although in the conventional design in which it features are also present a few brighter colors and a touch of gold. A fresco of a foot in width with a slender tulip in which the colors start with dull yellow and work into a slight reddish orange is used not only in the lobby but in the foyer and main auditorium.

Cork and rubber tile technically known as linotile is used in the Castle lobby and foyer floors and, incidenally, is the pride

How to Produce High Class Lighting Effects

A Description of the Use of Dimmer Equipments in Theatres

The Lighting Effects Produced Charm the Eye

The dimmer bank is used to give various color and light tone effects to accompany the demands of the music. A great many of the effects are under the direction of the leader's baton, as are the musical effects. Besides this, the varied hues and tints which charm the eye when seen across the footlights have been extended beyond the boundaries of the proscenium arch and employed to create an enveloping aura throughout the auditorium itself. With each successive number on the program, the house is bathed in whatever soft glow of color will best accentuate the mood of the spectators at that moment. It might be said that the decorative scheme of the theatre is never twice alike, yet it is always a marvel of delicate beauty, for by means of this unique system of illumination in color, the permanent decorations can be glorified at will into radiant loveliness.

The magic of these shifting color-harmonies is a result of the control of the hundreds of bulbs, arranged in color cycles of red, blue, green and amber, which nestle behind the cornices, shine within inverted chandeliers, hide back of columns, or glow softly through translucent panels set here and there in wall and ceiling.

The play of color, though extending to all parts of the house, is most impressive in the huge, shallow dome which canopies the auditorium. Done in ivory and gold, with flat bas-reliefs and concentric friezes of conventional design, this dome takes on at different times every opalescent effulgence imaginable. Similar charm is lent to the proscenium arch and the half-dome over the orchestra pit. Behind the transparent scenic settings the colored lights again come into play, creating any desired scenic effect, from the palest moonrise to the hot glare of a Sicilian midnoon.

In harmonizing lighting effects with music, it is possible to parallel the theme of an overture with a changing color theme that supports and amplifies the appeal of the music in a fashion quite astonishing.

There is no direct light whatever, and as a consequence these color effects as obtained through the use of the dimmers are very effective.

Each Side of Plate a Separate Dimmer

Dimmer plates can be provided, where necessary, with a resistance on each side of the base. This really makes one plate equal to two. Each side can be used as a dimmer for a separate group of carbon filament or tungsten lamps. Or, one of these plates may be used as a complete two-wire or a complete three-wire dimmer.

Dimmers installed above stage switchboard in Victoria theatre, Pittsburgh

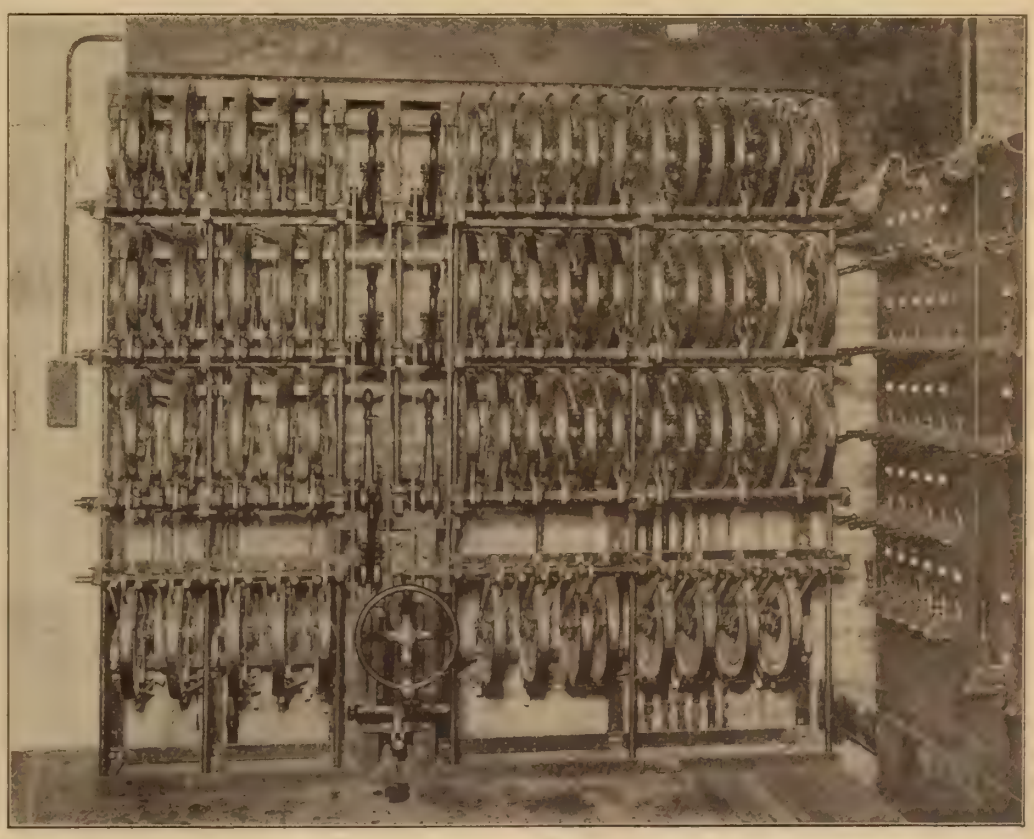
The contact buttons are of punched copper and ground smooth so that there is very little friction between them and the contact lever. Operation is consequently made very easy. The terminals are of brass, mounted on the circumference of the plate and are easily accessible. The wires connecting the terminals of the resistance are arranged in grooves in the soapstone under the malleable iron frame. The contact lever is bolted to a fibre disc which in turn is mounted on the shaft carrying the operating pinions. All current carrying parts are therefore perfectly insulated from operating levers, shafts, rack rods, pinions, iron base frame and the frame work in which the plates are assembled.

The terminals for making the connections are accessibly located and the well-known rack and pinion drive, first employed on Cutler-Hammer dimmers, is used for moving the brushes over the contact segments. The length of the operating levers makes it possible to obtain very gradual movement eliminating jerky motions and consequent poor dimming effects.



Lighting effects in the Riviera theatre, Chicago, are produced by these dimmers

Each Plate is a Complete Self-Contained Unit

As every dimmer plate is a complete self-contained piece of apparatus it can be removed or replaced easily and can be operated alone or in connection with others by individual or master levers.

There are 110 steps of resistor provided, the standard plates dimming Mazda B (Standard Vacuum Tungsten) lamps or Mazda C (Nitrogen Filled Tungsten) lamps completely out without flicker when used at the rated voltage and wattage. The capacities of dimmers vary in lamp wattage from 450 to 13,200 watts.

A few plates or many may be installed at a time according to requirements, and having installed, say six or eight plates, more may be added as occasion may require. Four of these plates, sufficient for a house using not more than a total wattage in lamps of 13,200 watts, can be installed in a space about 20 inches each way, less space than would be covered by a single page of a daily paper.

Since a plate can be furnished with a winding on each side, it is possible to design the unit for three different capacities in lamps, the quality of dimming being equally good for all. For example, one winding may be designed for 20-40-watt lamps and the other for 45-40-watt lamps and by connecting the two windings in parallel, a third capacity of 65-40-watt lamps is obtained. In changing the number of lamps controlled by the dimmer plate, it is only necessary to change the connections at the terminals of the dimmer.

Types of Dimmers

Two types of dimmers are manufactured—interlocking dimmers and non-interlocking. The interlocking mechanism enables any number of plates to be operated at one time by means of a master lever, whereas in non-interlocking dimmers each plate must be operated by its individual lever.

The principal difference between the two consists in the fact that in the latter the handle forming part of the operating lever is fastened rigidly to the metal casting to which the driving rod is attached, whereas in the case of interlocking dimmers the handle is fastened to a steel rod which passes through the casting referred to and engages a slotted cam mounted on the shaft. A coiled spring tends to force the steel rod (or interlocking bolt, as it is called) into the slot in the cam and when in this position the lever is interlocked with the shaft and moves with it.

If all of the levers are interlocked with the shaft then all of the dimmer plates in that row can be moved in unison by the master lever, but by giving any of the smaller lever handles a half turn to the right, the interlocking bolt is raised clear of the slot and this lever will not now respond when the shaft is revolved. This makes it possible to instantly throw any lever (and its corresponding dimmer plate) into or out of interlock with the master lever. The interlocking dimmers can be operated singly (each by its own individual lever) or any or all of the individual levers can be interlocked with the main shaft and operated in unison by the master lever. With non-interlocking dimmers each plate is operated by its own individual lever.

The Interlocking Mechanism

It will frequently happen that the stage electrician desires to partially raise the lights on a certain circuit in advance of other lights of the same color, and then (after an interval) to bring all lights of that color up to full candle power. This is readily accomplished by means of the interlocking mechanism.

The plates controlling the lamps which are to be brightened in advance of the others are first operated by means of their individual levers. Having raised these lights to the point desired it will be found that the interlocking bolt rests on the edge of the slotted cam, the spring coiled around the bolt tending to keep it in close contact with the cam.

When the moment arrives for brightening the other lamps the master lever is called into service, operating in unison all plates interlocked with the shaft. The plates controlling the lamps which have already been partially brightened will not be in interlock at first, but as the shaft is revolved by the master lever, the cam will also turn until a point is reached where the slot in each cam comes under its corresponding bolt. The bolt will then drop into the slot and interlock with the shaft, and from this point on the lamps controlled by the newly interlocked plates will respond to the master lever.

This feature of dimmer construction enables the operator to set individual levers at points giving various degrees of illumination and then pick up one after another by employing the master lever alone.

In connection with the levers, it should be noted that while the contact lever moves through an arc of 180 degrees, the throw of the operating lever is only 55 degrees, the angular motion of the latter being multiplied by the rack of the driving rod and the pinion which revolves the contact lever. This form of construction is obviously superior to the old-time practice of attaching the operating lever directly to the contact lever, since Cutler-Hammer dimmers can be operated by a slight movement of the operator's hand, instead of requiring the lever to be moved back and forth through a distance of a foot or more.

The plates used in a dimmer equipment may be arranged in one, two, three or more rows with operating levers assembled either above the plates or below them. In some installations the plates are located behind or away from the switchboard, which is known as rear of board mounting.

In the Christmas Issue which appears next week there will be given the most comprehensive data on the design and equipment of projection rooms that has appeared in any trade paper. It will be a section worth keeping for possible future use and reference.

Community Theatre in Catskill, N. Y. was Financed and Built by Residents

Venture Has Proved Successful Although 1100 Seats is Large Capacity for Town of 6000 Population

WHETHER a small town can see the benefits to be derived from a theatre owned jointly by those residing in the community seems to have been answered to the satisfaction of Herman Pollak, manager of the Community theatre at Catskill, New York. For many months now Mr. Pollak has been running the Community theatre and his patrons have supported him completely through their regular attendance.

Herman Polak, manager of Community theatre

The project was put over in a simple manner. The few men interested formed the Local Community Amusement Corporation of Catskill. Stock was sold to as many of the citizens as cared to participate with business totalling 392 at the present time. Mr. Pollak was elected president of the corporation and appointed manager of the theatre.

Plans for the new house was entrusted to John J. McKeefe, architect of New York. As finally erected the theatre, which seats 1100 cost the corporation $135,000. Of the 1100 seats, the auditorium or main floor seats 685 and the balcony accommodates the remainder.

The theatre has very nearly the ideal proportions for motion picture exhibition, being relatively long and narrow. Its dimensions outside are 60 x 172 and inside 50 x 110.

A subdued color scheme was decided upon and the final selection was blue and buff. This scheme was continued in the stage curtain which are of a darker shade of blue. Decorations were planned and executed by Eckhart.

The plans of the Corporation called for the showing of motion pictures as the regular program with occasional one night stands of the late New York plays. This arrangement necessitated the incorporation of a stage and dressing rooms, there being 8 of the latter.

General auditorium lighting is semi-direct but during the performance illumination is obtained from side wall units properly shaded to protect the eyes of the patrons.

The floor covering throughout is of heavy cork linoleum making the theatre easy to clean reducing the dust nuisance and deadening foot falls.

The projection room is located in the balcony. This room is 12 x 11 feet in size and houses two Simplex projectors, a double dissolving stereopticon and a spot light. Ventilation is obtained by a 12 in. motor driven exhaust fan located in the ceiling near the center of the room. Direct current for the projectors is and joy of its owner's heart. The joys of linotile, Mr. MacDonald asserts, are that not only is it soft and luxurious under the feet but that it may be kept clean with practically no trouble at all. Its smooth surface is easily swept and soap and water may readily be applied.

In the lobby one first notices the "exit" signs, which are unusual in their elaborateness. "I have been making exit boxes for 20 years but never have I seen anything like those that Mr. MacDonald has ordered for the Castle theatre," said Mr. Povey of the Povey Glass Company of Portland, Ore. Instead of being obviously utilitarian, merely a sign to direct people wishing to leave the house, they are decidedly ornamental and a part of the theatre's decorative scheme. They are made of a high-grade stained glass.

When designing the new Castle theatre it was found necessary to build one pilaster exactly in the center of the lobby. No scheming would alter the fact that the safe building of the house demanded its location there. Accordingly, Mr. MacDonald set about to make of that indispensable pilaster, commonly thought of as the worst kind of an obstruction, a veritable asset from the standpoint of beauty. His tulip fresco, mural decorations such as the art noveau and his lighting system finally brought around the result desired. Indirect lighting is used, the fresco coming out basket-effect from the pilaster just enough to leave room for the electric globes. The effect is most charming and highly suitable. One hundred and fifty of them are used throughout the house.

Brass railing in the lobby was decided upon as part of the permanent, immovable furnishings, but the railing was gone over with a preparation which left that shiny new brass with an old, antique finish consistent for a theatre known as the "Castle."

Two "Motiograph" projection machines equipped with all extra devices, furnished the projection room. Emerson exhaust fans, costing $1,250, have been installed and make possible an entire change of air within four minutes. There is not one drape within the entire house, even the screen being devoid of a curtain. The $600 screen made of a gold preparation has been so put in that on exactly the same level with the back of the stage it stands out as if raised two or three inches from its backing.

Mr. MacDonald boasts of the hygienic assets of his house which has no drapes of any kind to collect germs and which he says could be washed by water and not harmed.

Shearer Is Youngest Simplex Distributor

AMONG the extensive Simplex Distributing Family, there is none who has "arrived" more thoroughly or speedily than the youngest member—namely, Benjamin Franklin Shearer, president of the Western Theatre Equipment Company, with offices in Seattle, Wash.; Billings, Mont.; and Portland, Ore., respectively. Mr. Shearer, who is but 28 years old, is one of those hustling youths, a true product of the Northwest, who besides having served a bona-fide apprenticeship in the supply business, topped the whole educational business off with a two-year term in old Uncle Sam's Army, from which he emerged as a second lieutenant with a world of executive knowledge.

B. F. Shearer, president and manager of the Western Theatre Equipment Co.

Young Ben Franklin first gave the world at large a sample of his vocal abilities 28 years ago in Decatur, Ill., and some inkling of his future greatness must have been privately sent to the elders of the Shearer family, for they were unanimous in bestowing upon the howling youth the name of the famous founder of the Saturday Evening Post. A two-year course in the Milligan Technical University of Decatur, years that were crammed full of knowledge along engineering lines, provided our young distributor with the ability to talk volts, amperes, and ohms with the best of them.

Soon afterward Mr. Shearer joined the W. H. Swanson forces, acting as projectionist for this company, which was then controlling a circuit of opera houses throughout the State of Illinois. The lure of business soon pulled young Shearer to Billings, Mont., where he operated one of Billings' first motion picture theatres, and then followed a trip into Canada for the Canadian Film Exchange, which company operated an extensive circuit of houses in the Dominion. After this, Mr. Shearer came back to Billings, going to work for Mr. E. C. O'Keefe (his present partner), who then operated a theatre in that city.

Just about this time, the thought came to Shearer that he was depriving the industry of one of its greatest salesmen, and he abandoned the habit of hiding his light under his modest bushel and budded out as a full-fledged machine salesman.

And then came the war, which saw Shearer lay down his order book and enter army life as a private at Camp Lewis, Seattle. He came back to civil life more than two years later as a second lieutenant with shoulder straps 'neverything.

The rigorous army life had added force to his already progressive nature, and he left his outfit with an earnest determination to do big things, with the result that with E. C. O'Keefe, he organized the Western Theatre Equipment Company in Billings, Mont., starting out with himself as the working crew, in a single room. Eight months later found him with a crew of eight people and a large establishment in Billings, and a still larger main office with a crew of eleven in the city of Seattle.

secured from a 60 amp. 220 volt General Electric Compensarc.

One hundred and ten feet away from the projection room is the Mirroroid screen, 15 x 18 feet in size. Because of the location of the projection room, the angle of projection is small and this feature shows up in the excellent screen picture produced.

The front of the Community theatre is constructed of tapestry brick, as shown in one of the illustrations accompanying this article. A lobby 15 ft. in width and 40 ft. in length leads by the ticket office into the foyer.

Complete laison between the manager and the several sections of the theatre is maintained by a complete intercommunicating phone system manufactured by the Connecticut Electric Co., phone stations have been placed in the ticket office, projection room, orchestra pit and behind stage.

A Seeburg organ furnishes the music for the photoplays and may even be used to supplement the orchestra when legitimate plays are being produced.

The theatre is heated by a battery of H. B. Smith boilers, through radiators placed at various points about the main and balcony floors.

Ventilation is effected by a complete installation of the Monsoon system.

The Community theatre is a creditable addition to a city of any size but when it is taken into account that Catskill is a town of only 6000, the success of the undertaking is worthy of special mention. Much of it is due no doubt to the wisdom of the architect in his design and specifications but a goodly portion must be directed to Manager Pollak, on whose shoulders the actual managership has fallen.

Grand Central to Open Soon in St. Louis

More than $125,000 has been expended in the remodeling and redecoration of St. Louis' first organ theatre, the New Grand Central, which will have its formal reopening during the latter part of next week.

Both the exterior and the interior of the building have suffered radical changes. A new lighting system costing $35,000 has been installed. Special dimmers will permit the use of colored harmonies with pictures, which will afford pleasing sensations to the audience.

In addition, a new organ concealed in the proscenium has been set up. The first instrumental organ to be introduced to St. Louis motion picture followers was the one which is now being supplanted by the instrument which cost $35,000.

Atwater to Supervise New Projector Sales

L. W. Atwater, who has been placed in charge of sales of the new U. T. E.—Proctor Automatic Projector. Mr. Atwater is one of the pioneers in the industry and is thoroughly acquainted with projector sales conditions.

L. W. ATWATER, who for the past year and a half has successfully managed the New York branch store of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation, is now connected with the executive office, at 1604 Broadway.

The business at the New York branch has been most gratifying under the careful guidance and efficient management of Mr. Atwater and his many friends will wish him continued success in his added responsibilities.

He will supervise the sale of the new U. T. E. Proctor Automatic Projector now being manufactured for distribution outside the territory in which the United Theatre Equipment Corporation holds the franchise for distribution of the Powers Cameragraph.

Mr. Atwater is a pioneer in his experience with motion picture machines, having started in the motion picture industry with the Edison Company in 1904. He was sales manager for the Nicholas Power Company as well as the Precision Machine Company, manufacturer of the Simplex motion picture machine. In these capacities, he has come in personal contact with users of projection apparatus in this and other countries. There is probably no one better versed in sales promotion of theatre equipment than he.

The New York branch is now in charge of Edward A. Cumberland, who has officiated as assistant manager for many months.

New Theatre Opens in Philadelphia

The Astor, built where once the German theatre attracted great crowds nightly, at Franklin and Girard avenues, Philadelphia, is the newest photoplay house to be added to the Quaker City's long list of amusement palaces. It opened on Monday, November 22nd, and despite a terrible storm, attracted a great crowd, who came and were greatly pleased with the attractive appearance of the theatre, the excellent music, the good program, and the personal appearance of Clara Kimball Young, who graced the inaugural by a visit to the house.

The feature with which the playhouse opened was "If I Were King," starring William Farnum. The shorter subjects were also of the same high caliber and an orchestra of "symphony soloists," as they are termed by the management, provided the best of things musical. The personal appearance of the star was heralded by terrific applause and wild excitement. She appeared at two different performances, in the evening, and each time the noise was deafening when she first came into view.

The German theatre was a great dramatic center in days gone by, and many a member of the older generation can remember it well. Of late years it has been empty, or used in a desultory way for pictures. The decision to rebuild it as an up-to-date photoplay house was heralded as a wise one.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Tests of Screen Illumination from Motion-Picture Projectors

Table 3 shows a series of measurements where the same standard lamp was used, refocussing it four different times. Between set-ups the lamp was removed from the socket and the spherical mirror location changed. The maximum variation from the mean is plus or minus ¾ of one per cent. Another method of verification is to project the beam into an integrating sphere, thus determining the total flux.

ANALYSIS OF RESULTS

A comparison of the three sets of determinations, namely the 16-point, the 256-point and 1-point methods, shows them to be in substantial agreement. However, in this particular test, the standardization of the photometric equipment used for the one point, measurement was made to agree with the result as found by the 16-point method; therefore they should and do agree. This is shown in Table 4 where a number of lamps were measured by both methods, the photometric equipment for the 1-point method being standardized with an incandescent lamp.

TABLE 4. COMPARISON OF 16-POINT AND 1-POINT METHODS

No. of Lamps Measured	Lumens on Screen 1-Point Method Average	16-Point Method Average
10	838	835
6	728	726
6	589	594

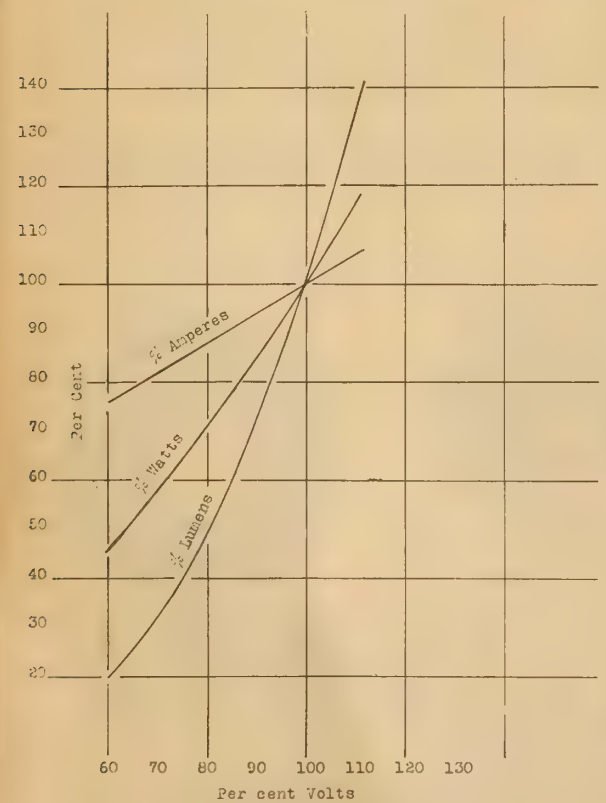
The 256-point method is slightly low, though it should be expected that the results would be even lower by reason of the proximity of the outer rows to the edge of the field, the outer row being considerably lower than the average. The test results of both the 16-point and 256-point method (plates 1 and 2) show that the plane of the filament is not exactly normal to the projector axis, since the lowest intensity is found in the lower right quadrant, the highest intensity in the upper left quadrant. The average of each quadrant by the 16-point method and that of the 256-point method is shown in table 5.

TABLE 5.
AVERAGE FLUX IN QUADRANT

	16-Point Method	256-Point Method
Upper Right	10.0	10.2
Upper Left	10.8	11.3
Lower Right	9.3	8.9
Lower Left	10.0	10.0

By a study of the 256-point method, it will be seen that the field uniformity bears little or no relation to the disposition of the filament coils or coil image. It might be expected that seven distinct vertical high ridges would be found to conform with the filament coils and coil images whereas the highest intensity is in the center of the field with a more or less gradual tapering off toward the edges with a greater taper toward the sides than toward the top and bottom. The superimposition of the filament image between the filament loops fill up and smooth out the field intensity.

An independent verification of the 1-point method was obtained by securing the transmission of the diffusing plates in the tube, the results of which showed the values for the 16-point method 4 per cent high. Again this would indicate that the 16-point method gives results which are slightly high.



INTENSITY INCREASE FROM MIRROR

The spherical mirror increases the screen illumination by filling up the gaps between filament loops and increasing the filament temperature by reflecting heat upon it. With a total increase of 70 per cent in screen illumination, 46 per cent may be attributed to the extension of the light source due to the image and 14 per cent to the temperature rise in the filament.

In table 6 will be found data showing the increased illumination with the use of the spherical mirror.

TABLE 6. PER CENT INCREASE DUE TO MIRROR

Average of 10 lamps selected at random	67%
Minimum	65%
Maximum	73%

The effectiveness of the mirror decreases with the life of the lamp; this is caused by the distortion and spread of the filament coils and the inability of the mirror to fill up the gaps.

INTENSITY CHANGE WITH CHANGES IN ELECTRICAL VALUES

During the test the current was supplied from storage batteries so that the necessity for correcting the variation in electrical values was eliminated. However, the attached characteristic curve, Plate 3, illustrates the variation in screen intensity resulting from variation in electrical values.

SCREEN FLUX IN RELATION TO THE LAMP TEMPERATURE

In general other things being equal, the test results show that the screen intensity varies with the filament brightness. Many apparent conflicting results are found though these may be attributed to filament irregularities.

FOCUSING

Supplementing results shown in the paper on "Some Considerations of the Application of the Tungsten Filament Lamps to Motion-Picture Projectors" appearing in the transactions of this Society, some experiments were made on the focusing of the lamp and spherical mirror. Mr. Porter and Mr. States show diagrams which indicate the change in screen lumens due to spherical mirror and condenser being moved from the correct position.

Assuming the correct position for the condenser, aperture plate and objective lens, some experiments were made to determine the position for the lamp filament and spherical mirror in order to secure the highest field intensity. The method employed was to so place the lamp filament as to produce a filament image on a plate placed at different positions in front of the objective lens. This plate was moved from a position almost in contact with the outer lens of the objective to a position several inches in front of the objective, each time positioning the filament so that its image was projected with the best definition obtainable. In each position of the lamp the spherical mirror was placed so that the filament image was dove-tailed between the filament loops. In table 7 will be found the results of this study. It indicates that a considerable variation in the position of this screen will not materially change the quantity of the projected light.

CONCLUSIONS

Basing the conclusions upon test data, the one-point method produces satisfactory results for quick and accurate comparison of light sources where field uniformity has previously been determined. Where a study of uniformity is important, the 16-point method gives reasonably complete data. Where the full information is desired with respect to screen flux, uniformity and alignment of the filament and optical parts, a method employing a considerably larger number of test areas should be used.

Should Lenses Remain Focused?

A. G. Smith, Box 23, Dresden, Tenn., asks a pertinent question about focussing objectives:

With the objective lens remaining the same distance from the screen and with the film at the aperture staying the same distance from the objective lens and all being in good focus on the screen with one film—should it not be in focus with the next film run. In other words lenses do not change unless the distance is changed; then why should different films need a different focus. I don't believe they should except when film buckles a little. Please explain it.

Those studies on Practical Electricity are the real thing for most of the operators. Keep up the good work and then take up another line of Projection in the same simple language.

Reply: The three points that determine the focus of the image on the screen are the film, the objective and the screen. If the relative positions of these three elements are unchanged from one reel to the next there should be no need for refocussing. But very often when the reels are being changed the lens is jarred slightly and this necessitates re-focussing. Thanks for the appreciation of the Practical Electricity Series. It will be continued until the subject has been covered and then other series will be started.

Need of Greater Care of Projectors

A standard professional projector is a splendid piece of mechanism and the care given in its manufacture closely approximates that required in the manufacture of the finest scientific instruments. It is well that all those connected with the purchase or operation of motion picture machines should have some knowledge of the care taken in their construction. It is a mistake to imagine that any kind of a machine which will force a concentrated light through a rapidly moving film will do the trick. It would be just as much of an error to believe that any sort of an operator can deliver the kind of projection now demanded by managers. A good operator today strives to maintain his machine at that high state of efficiency which the manufacturers endeavor to supply. Concerns such as the Nicholas Power Company maintain experimental departments and are constantly on the alert to improve their product and method of manufacturing. It is only in this way that they can maintain the splendid reputation American projectors have gained throughout the world. Managers and operators should take a keen interest in the improvements and additions which are to be found on the latest type projectors. These changes are made because progressive theatres demand them. They pay for such improvements because it pays to do so.

Even those who are fairly familiar with motion picture machines seldom realize what an exact piece of mechanism these machines are and the wear and tear upon them in the course of the year. The time taken to change each separate photograph on the film going at an average rate is one ninety-sixth of a second and in many houses nearly one hundred millions of these changes are made in a year. The slightest inaccuracy or variation through wear soon becomes perceptible on the screen and for this reason the parts must be made of the finest material and with scientific accuracy.

There is no doubt that all but a small percentage of projectionists take a great interest in the machines they operate and are glad to gather the fullest and latest information regarding machines. Operators should get in touch with the manufacturers of projectors either through personal visits or correspondence and learn the whys and wherefores of modern projector instruction. No machine is perfect and manufacturers are seeking constantly to improve their product. The Nicholas Power Company is always glad to hear from operators and will seek to solve their problems. Such problems are bound to occur in the operation of any piece of mechanism.

Effect of Carbon Tetrachloride on Motion Picture Film

As a result of a series of tests in the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company, it has been found that commercial carbon tetrachloride, if left in contact with motion picture film, will attack the image (especially in the presence of moisture) and bleach it out to a faint yellowish white image.

The corrosive action of the tetrachloride is probably due to traces of sulphur chloride formed as a by-product in the manufacture of tetrachloride by the action of chlorine on carbon bisulphide. On exposure to the air in the presence of moisture, the sulphur chloride deposits sulphur which combines with the silver image to form a faint yellow image of silver sulphide. A tetrachloride faded image gives all the chemical tests for silver sulphide.

To confirm this theory of the action of tetrachloride on film, one part of sulphur chloride was added to 1,000 parts of moist carbon tetrachloride and a strip of dry motion picture film immersed in the solution. After 24 hours the highlights had faded to a pale yellow and in 3 days the image was bleached out entirely.

With commercially pure tetrachloride prolonged contact for a month or more is necessary to produce any marked effect, depending on the purity of the sample, so that usually no trouble will be experienced if the solvent is allowed to thoroughly evaporate from the film before rewinding. To insure this the film should be wound spirally on a large drum covered with cloth and the cleaning liquid applied with a soft cloth or velvet. The solvent has then sufficient time to thoroughly evaporate before rewinding.

If the film is cleaned on the rewinder by allowing it to pass through a cloth moistened with tetrachloride, the solvent has not time to evaporate before the film is rewound on the reel. The result is that a certain amount of the solvent is held between the convolutions of film and, on storing, this attacks the film image, producing a patchy faded out effect.

Solvents which do not attack film are gasolene, benzene, toluene and xylene, though they are inflammable. The solvent tetrachlorethylene is non-inflammable and can be recommended for film cleaning. This substance does not attack the film and is sufficiently non-volatile to remain on the film for a short time before evaporating, and so has a chance to dissolve out the grease from the film before it is wiped off. The precautions above for cleaning on a large drum should be observed with this solvent also.

Todd Explains His "Velvet Focus"

Arthur Todd, the clever cameraman who was recently awarded a gold medal by the National Cinematographic Society for his unique work in Robert Brunton's all-star feature drama, "The Devil to Pay," has added another device to his long list of camera inventions.

This innovation was presented by Todd to a crowd of three hundred cameramen at a meeting held in Los Angeles this week. He calls his invention "the velvet-focus." It is a perfection of the "soft-focus" effect that has come into extensive vogue during the last year. Todd produces the velvet effect by placing a square of fine glass over the camera lens. This glass is sprayed with a solution of glycerine and water. Todd used the device during the filming of several recent Brunton productions and found it unusually successful. Besides this invention Todd is credited with introducing the "linen" finish in film photography, which is gained by placing a chemically treated screen four or five feet beyond the camera, in front of the subject. He has taken out no less than twelve patents on his work during the past nine months.

This Year is a Year of Portable Sets

In studio parlance 1920 may well be known as the year of portable power plants. In the News alone there have appeared numerous reports of such equipments some of them having been peiced together from odds and ends while others—and no doubt the most successful—have been the result of considerable study, design and experimentation.

The latest equipment of this nature is shown in the accompanying photographs, for which we are indebted to the Autolectric Devices Corporation. Because of the apparent widespread interest in portable sets, this particular one will be described in considerable detail.

Its bed plate is constructed of channel and angle irons with welded instead of bolted points, giving regidity, light weight and great strength.

The Generator is a Westinghouse Electric Type S K 125 volt compound wound to run at 900 r.m.p. with characteristics agreeing with those of the gasoline engine driving it.

Between the generator and motor is the coupling of a special leather disc.

The gas engine in the equipment pictured below is a Wisconsin, 6 cylinder of 150 m. p. capacity. A special fan provides adequate coiling. The governor is positive inaction and unusually sensitive, maintaining a constant voltage on the generator after being adjusted to increase slightly the speed as the load is applied. By this arrangement the generated voltage remains constant within about 2 volts from no-

Excellent Book on "Airplane Photography"

Scarcely a reel of news films is seen nowadays that does not contain in its thousand feet several aerial shots. In fact the managers of news reels are depending on air stunts to a great extent to put the "snap" into their releases. Most of these examples of aerial cinematography do not compare favorably with ground work and while of course conditions are much more severe, doubtless the quality could be improved in numerous ways.

In next week's issue, providing space is available, there will appear a review of Dr. Ives' recent book on "Airplane Photography." In this book are valuable suggestions which, while written primarily for the "still" photographer, may be taken over by the cinema worker.

The Complete Picture Production

scheme, and any producer can have it with my compliments.

I would make certain "musical correspondents" in each territory of the country. I would select these men for their musical and picture understanding. Their job would be to represent me as the producer at the theatre when a big feature picture was about to go on. Well in advance of the showing, the correspondents would be sent the score of the music, and would be given full suggestions. The correspondent musician would then confer with the local first-run house musician, and together they would "conspire" to make the best kind of showing.

These correspondent musicians would be akin to the service-men in the field.

Only their job would be to watch over the musical progress of the pictures. They would be kept on some kind of a retainer basis. And it can be done—and moreover it will be done—watch it.

However, that is going further afield, and is not essential to my argument.

There are certain essentials in the general argument I am making.

Until the producer sees the wisdom of protecting his features with a musical shield, he is always in the hands of the most ignorant musician. And that musician can ruin him. It is a weak link which can break the entire chain.

For the reverse side of the picture, there are coming "Grand Opera Films"—pictures on a par with the Metropolitan Opera music for grandeur and prestige and atmosphere.

The Music Forum

(Under this heading the new ideas, queries, suggestions are gathered. This is where the motion picture fraternity gets together on music.)

News of the approaching Conference of Motion Picture and Musical Men is not only attracting interest throughout the United States, but is beginning to excite friendly comment in foreign countries as well.

Among the many letters which the Musical Editor has recently received from abroad is one from Sasha Votichenke, the distinguished Russian composer, who is giving a series of Tympanon Recitals in Italy and France. The letter is addressed from the Hotel Canada in Paris, and is as follows:

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I have just received news of the First National Conference which I am sure will appeal to all who are concerned with the problem of Music and its relation to the Photoplay. I regreat that I shall not be in America in time to attend the Conference, but as I am deeply in sympathy with your high purpose and aims, I wish to take this opportunity to express a word of greeting and my sincere congratulations for the work which you have already accomplished as a means towards bringing better music into the motion picture theatres.

With best wishes for the success of the convention,

SASHA VOTICHENKO.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Your article "How to Judge Cue Sheets," which appears in the current issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is, in my estimation, the best thing ever written in the NEWS on a subject of such vital interest to Musical Directors. No one can appreciate such articles more than I, for the reason that I, among many others, have had to put up for many years with the idiotic cue sheets that have and are being written by these self-styled experts. I can truthfully say, and I am sure the majority of Directors agree with me, there has not been ONE cue sheet written which has filled the purpose for which it was written to HELP the Director who has to play for a picture before seeing it.

One thing I differ with you. That is, when speaking about some nonsensical cue sheets, in not mentioning the writer of same. The person who wrote the cue sheets received a good sum for the effort (?) and is supposed to be capable of the work, therefore if he writes cue sheets that are a joke mention his name, so that he will (after reading what others think of him) either learn to write better ones or go back to his real work.

Some time ago I read an article by "G. H. Bruce" in which, in answer to a young lady who wrote him for advice as to how to obtain work as a cue sheet writer, he said (I do not remember the exact words) the majority of movie companies did not give attention to the ability of cuesheet writers but that they (the producers) favored persons who applied for the work with a fraternal button in their coat lapel and with plenty of talk which enabled them to make an impression.

He is right. For they will not give persons with genuine ability a chance. Mr. Bruce wrote the cue sheet for "The Garter Girl," a Vitagraph picture. Mr. Bruce suggested WIGWAM —an Indian Fox-Trot, for a scene in which Mr. Griffith does an Oriental dance. Can you picture an Indian trot for a dance which demanded the dance Oriental Dance by Loubomirsky (published by Schirmer)? But of course Mr. Bruce did not think (?) at the moment that an Oriental dance is not an INDIAN dance. I wonder what the other Directors thought of Mr. B. when they saw what he suggested?

In a scene showing a Minuet being danced, Mr. "Jones," the writer of a cue sheet, suggests "The Campbells Are Coming." Since when is the aforesaid number considered a MINUET? This was for the picture "Darlin' Mine." I acknowledge Mr. "Jones'" ability as a musician, and a GOOD one, too, but when he writes such suggestions I wonder what the others think. I could write on forever about the foolish numbers the present writers put down on cue sheets, especially the ones who are in the publishing game, too, and favor their issues which fit no more than a square peg in a round hole. And they get away with it.

I am enclosing an article, one of the many that I have written for the Musical Enterprise, called "Have Mercy." It was written many months ago and only substantiates what you have written in the current issue of the NEWS. We must be absolutely impartial. "Roast" those who do not do the work as it should be done, and credit those deserving. We must do as one well-known cue sheet writer, who favors only his own publications on the many cue sheets (?) he puts out. He said to me: "Write all the articles you like on the bad cue-sheets, but don't mention any names!" He admitted, like all gentlemen do, that his own were bad. But he was afraid to see it in print. It might stop directors from buying his own music suggested on his own cue sheets. And cuesheet writers get paid to arrange them to help Musical Directors!

YOU can remedy this sin. Thru your column, Mr. Isaacson, you can help musicians get the help they are entitled to from the producers. Better cue sheets. When you took charge of the music column in the NEWS I knew that I could not afford to miss a single copy of the NEWS because you were going to make things hum, and you have. I'll be at the convention. No one can afford to be absent Keep up this good work. The criticizing of things that should be remedied, the suggesting of things that all directors should "Ease up" and the answering of questions vital to the betterment of the music for movies. I know you can and will improve things. You can print the article "Have Mercy" in your column if you like, but mention the Musical Enterprise.

JOE ZIVELLI,
Musical Director, Empire Theatre.
Staten Island.

Dear Editor:

I have been a careful reader and observer of all your articles in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and have read them with interest and deep thought because I think it a fine movement, worthy of consideration.

I am employed at the Gem theatre in this city and am a general fellow. I am regularly in charge of the music for pictures. We have an electric organ and it is sure some job to pick the proper rolls for the picture but I have never yet given up.

I have just graduated from High School here and have had about six years' training and experience playing in the High School orchestra which I liked very much. Sometimes it was good and sometimes bad. The orchestra ranged all the way from ten to twenty pieces, depending on occasions. I have also had about 7 years' playing in the brass band, and am still playing in that. I like music very much and attend everything musical that is given around here.

My instrument is the cornet or trumpet. I play solo in the band and played first in the orchestra, sometimes being in full charge of the orchestra.

I have tried twice to organize a small orchestra and have not been altogether unsuccessful. It is not that I cannot control the boys or am not liked, but it is hard for them to stay interested. I would like to get one started and put it in this theatre if possible, and ask your advice on how to get and keep the boys interested. Of course, you can readily see the manager would not want to pay a lot of money out and get nothing in return. He is very anxious to see me start one, for he wants a change of music.

I would just for once like to show the people around here what can be done in the way of music, and I ask your help and advice to do it.

I can get the following instruments: several violins, cornets, clarinet, saxophone, flute, trombone, traps and piano. This saxophone is C. Please tell me what part this saxophone can play in the orchestra. Is the piano absolutely necessary? I ask this because I find it hard to get anyone to stay with it. Would it be better to cut the saxophone out? Can get no bass or cello at this time. If saxophone can play the cello part, as I am told, would that do in place of cello? Tell me if the above combination is good or not and what you would advise. They are amateurs in a sense but have all had from 3 to 6 years' experience playing in band and orchestra.

Also tell me where we can secure music that is not so hard to play, but good and pretty? Tell me the best kind for this arrangement and where we can get it cheap and for nothing if possible.

I do not care to have this printed in the News with my name. Please put me on the News mailing list and send me anything you have that will help me now or later on. I hope to have your personal reply and advice on all these matters. Send anything that will help. Hoping to hear from you immediately, for I would like to have something ready for special attraction during the holidays for special pictures, I remain,

ORGANIST.

The Answer:

Your letter is rather different than the average inquiry I receive. From what I gather you are trying to organize an orchestra of semi-professionals for a motion picture theatre and your main question is what kind of a combination should you have and then how can you keep your boys interested.

Let's take the second question first—how to keep them interested. I presume they are going to be paid. The first thing then is to find out how much the theatre manager is going to spend. Make the offer to the boys, tell them what they are to get and mention that after a certain time if the orchestra works up their salary will be raised.

Then, too, there is another phase of the matter that should be helpful, and that is this. As the orchestra becomes popular with your townspeople, there will be many other engagements, dances, weddings, etc., and your reputation will be made, and your boys may then be able to graduate from your orchestra to some of the bigger orchestras. There is a growing demand for men for symphonic orchestras.

Of course the next thing to do is to show them how you can do interesting things accompanying the picture and doing special numbers. If you have some soloists, play them up!

The combination you suggest is all right. The saxophone is not essential. The saxophone might play the cello, but you won't have enough bass. Certainly you must keep the piano, but let him do very little playing except for strong bass accompanying.

I would suggest that you communicate with the different publishers and build up as good a library as you can.—MUSIC EDITOR.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I have read with great interest the literature relative to your Music-Picture conference.

While what I have to say on the subject can hardly be of value to you, still it may interest you, as bearing on the probable effect of such an organization as you contemplate on the picture industry of the small town. (Greeley census is 11,000.)

We have two picture houses managed by intelligent men. They employ directors for their orchestras whose musicianship is of a high standard. The orchestras, though small, are competent and they play as good music (by this I mean classical) as they are permitted by what they consider popular taste. I am sure they would be delighted to play more real music.

The picture houses certainly offer a splendid opportunity for furthering the general musical education of the American people. I am entirely for it!

Wishing you great success in the undertaking,

LOTTIE WELLS CLARK.

Greeley, Colo.

My Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I am greatly pleased with the opportunity to express my undivided interest in the deliverations of your approaching conference. As I shall not be able to meet you there personally, I beg this way to offer my most sincere wishes for the unqualified success of one and all the meetings.

My personal activities are touching nearly every line of musical endeavor, and so, of course, I am aware of the fact that, next to school and, perhaps, church, the greatest direct influence on the life of our people lays in the realm of the movies. If now the latter power is willing to join forces with Madama Musica, giving her under favorable conditions full opportunity to serve in her missionary labor of culture and refinement, reaching thus the masses in a wide and so far practically unexplored field, writer—as a musician—cannot refrain from hailing your efforts in this latest line of artistic endeavor as one of the most vital and most important movements in the theatrical history of modern days.

WM. MEYER.

Jacksonville, Fla.

Dear Editor:

Thank you for your letter of the 10th containing suggestion about motion picture music being printed in reverse. In this connection the writer has also had some thought along the same line except that the reverse printing was to be done directly from the plates identical with our proof copy as per the sample enclosed.

I personally believe that the green is better than the blue or black. This would of course necessitate a special edition, and the writer is somewhat in doubt as to the commercial value of such a special edition.

Owing to the cost entailed in their production from the plates made up as they are now, this is of course impossible as this is a hand process. Printing this way in quantities would necessitate a great outlay for reverse plates. However, the thought is a good one and the opportunity may be afforded at some future time whereby advantage may be taken of it. In the meantime we wish to thank you for your kind suggestion. Would ask that you kindly pass on our reply to your inquirers.

LEO FEIST, INC.,
By M. L. O. Smith, Mgr. B. & O. Dept.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

You ask that we discuss the conference amongst my associates. I am doing this and have been doing this, because, as you know, the advancement of music is the nearest thing to my heart, and therefore it is on my lips.

I wish to call your attention to one thing which I have found in Chicago and possibly you have found it in New York. It is well for us to know it now, in advance, that we may be fortified. Amongst the vaudeville producers there is a certain amount of antagonism against this conference. One of the reasons is they do not have music at heart and seem to think that the people want vaudeville skits and acts and not music. Another point, they think that music will eliminate some of their business; therefore, they will make the fight against us.

I am just bringing these matters to your attention in advance, but rest assured I have no worry on the subject because I know consensus of opinion of the public in the larger places regarding music and that the smaller places are slowly drifting that way and are becoming more eager, I might say, for music, month by month, as exemplified by the number of music clubs which have sprung up recently in the smaller places, where it never was thought of a few years ago. The motion picture house is practically the melting pot in all the cities and towns today and therefore, to educate the masses we have got to meet them on their own ground, and I have no doubt after this conference we will be a hundred per cent better fitted than we are today.

JAMES R. SAVILLE.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Have been very much interested in your plan for the convention in January. As I understand it, the invitation is general, and for all those interested in correct musical interpretation of the films, and, as organist of one of the largest of the Crandall theatres in Washington, I want to register my name as one of those wishing to attend.

Your articles in MOTION PICTURE NEWS have been read with great interest. Many of the things you advocate I have tried out personally and know that they have been proved by successful results. Am particularly glad to see you take up the cue-sheet evil.

Most of the sheets sent out greatly underestimate the intelligence of even a small town audience, I know that if I had played "Impish Elves" or "Capricious Annetta," etc.,—as many times as I have seen it indicated—my position as organist would have long since passed into other hands. There is a great tendency to "play down to the intelligence of audiences" any way, which is, I think, a mistaken one.

When I began my work playing pictures, without previous experience, I was told never to attempt anything beyond light and popular numbers—that the people did not understand anything else. That is one order I did not obey. I started in to use, and have used ever since, all the good things I ever knew, also tried to keep in touch with the new and popular numbers, and the appreciation of the audience has been an incentive to a continuous search for music newer and better as well as an effort to make mine the things which the classics have to offer. At the Knickerbocker the organ alternates with the orchestra in the interpretation of the feature and the program is laid out carefully for each.

So we are trying and I hope that the convention will be a great success and an inspiration.

Better Music Draws Bigger Crowds

Music for Every Feature

The pulling power of good musical programs has been proved by the most successful theatre managers everywhere. But no matter how big your orchestra, no matter how large the salaries you pay to your musicians, your music is not good unless every bar and line of it is expressly arranged and adapted to each foot of every film as it is run.

No matter how beautifully it is played, neither "The Star Spangled Banner" nor the "Memphis Blues" is a suitable and fitting musical accompaniment for a "sad parting" on the screen. Yet just such "bulls" are made every day in theatres everywhere, while audiences laugh in derision.

Synchronized Scenario Music Service makes all such mistakes impossible by supplying with each day's new film a specially prepared and arranged musical score to meet the needs of the largest orchestra or a single pianist. We bring right into your theatre the talent and genius of such musical celebrities and scenario score writers as Carl Edouarde, director of music at The Strand Theatre, New York City; James C. Bradford, director at the Broadway Theatre, New York, and C. J. Breil, composer of the music score of "The Birth of a Nation." These men are on our staff and personally supervise all the music we issue. Ask for further information and proof that our Better Music Draws Bigger Crowds.

Foreign Buyers Amalgamate

Syndicate to Buy Entire Rights, States F. V. Luporini

AS a result of negotiations that have been in progress for the past two months, and which have now been brought to a successful conclusion, Ferdinando V. Luporini, managing director of Luporini Brothers, of 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, is able to make an official announcement of a new policy relative to the supplying of the American made film for the foreign territories in which he is operating.

By means of an amalgamation of a number of the responsible and conservative foreign buyers, an arrangement has been effected whereby a syndicate buys the entire foreign rights to various well known pictures.

By operating in this manner the price paid for each individual picture is far less than if the rights were bought for just one or two foreign territories. Mr. Luporini is of the opinion that this plan is far more effective and of greater value to the foreign buyer than the prevailing practice of buying on commission.

He said, in speaking on this subject, "The man who is buying on commission must act against his own interest if he does everything in his power to conserve the interests of his client. This is not sound business and for this reason I have discontinued entirely buying pictures on commission.

"The man who is buying pictures on commission cannot serve the best interests of his client, for the simple reason that the cheaper he buys the less money he makes for himself. This is not good economics and is against human nature.

"I believe it is far more valuable and for the better interest of my clients for me to purchase outright the foreign rights to a picture and then resell it to them at a slight advance in price. By this method I am enabled to make a quick turn over on the pictures that I handle with a small profit on each one, and depend primarily upon the quantity of the business done rather than a big profit on each individual sale.

"I have been operating under this policy for the past six months and I find by actual experience that I am able to save my clients thousands of dollars and at the same time do a good business for myself."

Ferdinando V. Luporini has spent the last ten years in the heart of the film business in New York. He is in touch with all of the big producing companies and receives advance information on every American picture that is made before it is started in production.

The foreign office of the company in Torino, Italy, is in charge of Guido Luporini, who for the past several years has been engaged in the motion picture business in Rio de Janeiro.

"Gasoline Alley" for Screen

Russell - Greiver-Russell to Distribute Popular Cartoon

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed by which the firm of Russell-Greiver-Russell becomes producer and national controller of the "Gasoline Alley" cartoon film, upon which production is to start shortly.

"Gasoline Alley" is one of the most popular newspaper cartoons in the field today. Frank King of the Chicago Tribune has come to the front rapidly ever since the first "Gasoline Alley" strip was completed. Within a short period it has achieved great success, being syndicated in over sixty newspapers and with the syndication list growing rapidly.

Mr. King is not only widely known for his "Gasoline Alley" strip, but for several other cartoon successes, which will be recalled easily. Among them are "Motorcycle Mike," which was a national institution some years ago. "Danny Dreamer" was another one of Mr. King's successes. Some months ago Mr. King was author and cartoonist of a unique page in the Sunday Tribune known as the "Rectangle" and various other little departments such as "Pet Reeves," "Rubber Stamps" and "It Isn't the Cost, but the Upkeep." All of these cartoons enjoyed a widespread run in the newspapers of the United States.

Russell-Greiver-Russell, who have obtained the national rights to Mr. King's "Gasoline Alley," are rapidly finishing up the preliminary work and anticipate the release of the first "Gasoline Alley" cartoon by Christmas time. A diligent search has been made of the scenario market, a contributing staff of scenarioists is being formed in an effort to make these the funniest cartoons on the screen, if possible.

Another feature in the cartoon is the publicity plan mapped out for the benefit of the newspaper and state rights men. Besides obtaining syndication in the largest papers all over the country, it has planned to gain publicity in a great many other papers through the medium of a competition conducted by Russell-Greiver-Russell and paid for by them. Humorous automobile incidents will thus be found, it is expected. This competition is open to all and is to be sub-headed "Send us a letter telling us of your funniest motoring experience." Twenty-five dollars will be paid to the winner; $15 as second prize, and $10 as third prize. The winning letter each week will be arranged in a scenario form and will be shown on the screen in "Gasoline Alley" cartoons.

Mid-West Exchange's Notes

THE following bits of news are submitted by the Standard Film Service Company of Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit, members of the Federated Film Exchanges of America:

New one-reel spotlight comedies are meeting with exceptional success, having been booked for first run in all of the key cities.

Jean Goldsmith, formerly of Realart, has affiliated himself with the local Federated Exchange where he will have charge of their product in this territory. Mr. Goldsmith comes to the Federated with an enviable reputation and everybody wishes him unbounded success.

Danny McNat of the publicity department of General Motors, has made his debut in the film industry, and is hitting the trail in Central Ohio for the Standard Film Service Co. Canada Likes Jans Feature

"Madonnas and Men" Booked for 30 Weeks by Trans-Canadian, Ltd.

TWO weeks of big business done by "Madonnas and Men" at the Strand theatre, Toronto, has resulted in an arrangement with George Driscoll of the Trans-Canadian, Ltd., circuit whereby the Jans Pictures Corporation's state rights special will continue to play in Canada at two-dollar prices for many weeks to come. Playing the Trans-Canadian circuit insures the Jans spectacle of runs in the first-class theatres of Canada's largest cities, totaling thirty weeks.

"Madonnas and Men" opened at the Strand, Toronto, for one week's presentation but the business grew to such proportions by the sixth day that a second week's showing was decided upon. The interest manifested by Toronto in the production during the second week decided the Jans forces that "Madonnas and Men" was destined to take its place among the biggest pictures ever launched in the Dominion, and the long term of solid bookings at top prices quickly followed.

The manner in which the Jans feature lends itself to extensive advertising was illustrated in the Toronto daily papers where it was hailed as a spectacle combining in pretentiousness the most elaborate scenic effects of "Quo Vadis," "Ben Hur" and "Cabiria." The advertising campaign was launched on a large scale nd showed such excellent results, sttes Jans, that it will be continued in all other Canadian cities.

FLORIDA

It is reported from St. Petersburg, Florida, that a meeting of church workers was held in the First Baptist church, and a permanent organization effected to work out plans for regulation of motion pictures.

There was about fifty in attendance. Several of the speakers declared that the pictures now being shown in St. Petersburg were harmful. Censorship and a city ordinance, it was agreed, was to be the object of the organization, and a committee was appointed to work out a plan to regulate all pictures shown in the city and cut out those that were objectionable.

St. Petersburg is a tourist town on the west coast of Florida. There are four theatres there showing pictures—the La Plaza, Grand, Phile and Rex. All houses are controlled by the S. A. Lynch Enterprises.

H. A. Kelly, who acquired some fame through his promotion of a bureau of "stills" showing locations, scenery, etc., for the use of visiting producers of motion pictures, will face trial in the criminal court of Tampa, Florida.

Kelly is charged with having embezzled a valuable panoramic camera, in one case; and with having embezzled certain funds which were placed in his charge, in another case. The two charges refer back to the time when Kelly was connected with Mr. and Mrs. Paul Gilmore in the Pandora Film Company.

The S. A. Lynch Enterprises have secured an option on the two theatres at Fort Myers, Fla., and will take them over in five days, it is reported.

The two houses, the Arcade and Court, have been operated by Mr. Reynolds for the past two years and have been quite successful. Mr. Reynolds will join his brother, who is in business in Mexico, it is stated.

The Bonita, one of the three houses operated by the Strand Amusement Co. of Tampa, has been all "dolled" up. The front and interior have been newly decorated and new floor coverings put in.

A Christmas present for the children of West Tampa is being prepared by Mr. and Mrs. Diaz, who own the Royal there. A special program has been arranged and all children will be invited to attend the matinee, as guests of the house.

SAN FRANCISCO

Five hundred of the "400" from San Francisco were used as "extras" by Director Van Stroheim at the Del Monte sets, November 28, as a part of the production of the Universal picture, "Foolish Wives." The society folk represented habitues of the Monte Carlo casino in Europe. The Universal Co. paid $5,000 to charities as remuneration for the participation of the "400" in the film.

Dr. Maxim De Gross, who succeeds Colletti as leader of the Rialto theatre orchestra, San Francisco, took charge December 4, when the new management, headed by D. S. Markowitz and I. H. Jackson, assumed operation of that house. De Gross plans a policy of popular musical numbers instead of opera selections. He featured the "Japanese Sandman," the first week.

"No matter what the picture is, we're bound to hear good music at the Portola," is the opinion of the Portola patron. Two pianos are among the 12 pieces employed. Van B. Clement is resident manager.

E. R. Williams, manager of the San Francisco All-Star Feature Distributors exchange, has placed the "County Fair" at the Imperial theatre, week of December 19; Clara Kimball Young in "Hush" at the California theatre the week of December 5; "Isobel" at the same house later in the month; and "Fickle Women," first of the David Butler productions, at the Portola, week of December 26. Practically every key point has been closed on aforementioned productions in advance of release dates, reports Williams.

In connection with the San Francisco Mothers' Congress and Parent Teachers' Association, week of November 28, that week is being celebrated at the Frolic theatre as Child's Welfare Week. The welfare body will receive a percentage of receipts. Patrons who never before came to motion pictures are being greeted by manager Bob Abrahams.

When Educational's Film, "The Race of the Age," appeared at the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, week of November 21, the house was on edge. Applause was given as the winning horse gained. Manager Irvin E. Phelps of the Tivoli, was enthusiastic over the film.

The Majestic theatre, Reno, Nevada, advertised heavily in a Reno daily for the showing of this film. Other Nevada show houses then took advantage of the advertising by the larger house, and all booked the film, which Manager G. C. Blumenthal of the San Francisco Educational Film Exchange reports is doing wonderfully, surpassing all expectations for booking.

ATLANTA

There is no sign of a settlement of the strike of motion-picture operators and stage-hands, which has been on for several months in Winston-Salem, N. C., according to a report from the secretary of Local No. 451. A road call has been issued against the Auditorium and Broadway theatres, which are operated by the Piedmont Company.

Carson Bradford, one of the best-known exhibitors in the entire Southeast, has just sold out the Strand theatre, Nashville, Tenn., to two prominent Nashville business men, Messrs. F. W. Hooper and L. W. Jacobs.

Mr. Bradford bought the Strand four years ago and established it on a sound basis as one of the best paying theatres in the territory. The news that he has sold out will come as a surprise to his many friends. At present, he has made no plans, beyond an indefinite hunting and fishing trip to Florida, but all who know him are confident that he will soon be back in the game.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"The Palace of Darkened Windows"

(Selznick—Harry Rapf)

THIS picture carries a corking title, while, a trifle long is suggestive of deep mystery. The suggestion is not kept up after the introductory footage and what is seen is rather an ordinary story of an American girl, who, while touring in India, is lured to a rajah's palace and invited to join his harem. It is a production picture throughout. In point of scenic investiture the director has done himself proudly. The atmosphere of the Orient, the bazaars, the street fakirs, the snake charmers, the religious pilgrims—these are excellently capitalized. But the picture lacks moving moments. Drama is not present in any form except the element of romance.

The action gets rather monotonous as one wonders how the rajah will conduct himself. In that point it generates a little suspense. The fair American is curious about the native son. Being quite a diplomat it doesn't take him long in painting the color and atmosphere of his palace. But no sooner is the heroine and her chaperon inside the door than the Hindu shows his fangs. The inevitable rescue takes place with an American youth and an intrepid Britisher smashing villainy for the count.

Henry Kolker's backgrounds are much better than his action. He hasn't provided much mystery and very little melodrama. And the opportunity presented itself to develop a lively story. However, it is a fairly pleasing offering and will doubtless score with its pretentious backgrounds and atmosphere. There are entire street sets and bazaars and much local color and detail. The picture looks as if some money has been expended upon it. A cast that includes Adele Farrington, Jay Belasco, Geralf Pring, Arthur Carew and Claire Anderson contribute effective performances. Length 6 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Parlor Bolshevist"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox—One Half Reel)

THE best excuse for booking this one is that it is somewhat of an Americanization picture. Going away from the clever gags which usually make up the "plot" of these cartoons, the producers have been satisfied with ridiculing the Socialistic principle that "what is yours is mine."

Mutt and Jeff attend an afternoon Bolsheviki meeting. Jeff has just inherited a large sum of money, so his lanky companion enthusiastically indorses the principle of the division of wealth, and forces the little fellow to divide with him. But then the unshorn radicals take a hand in the affair, each one claiming a share in the money. Finally both Mutt and Jeff are left with fifty cents apiece. Jeff then takes things into his own hands and, with a revolver in hand, collects all his money. At the end he waves a flag and forces them all to sing the "Star Bangled Banner."

The cartoon is not funny, because it is very old and trite satire. A few clever drawings win a smile.—Matthew A. Taylor.

"Greek Meets Greek"

(Eddie Roland and Vanity Fair Maids—Pathe)

EDDIE BOLAND and his "six beauties" are entertaining, to say the least, in this one-reeler. Although there are few laughs in it, its amusement value stands out for the reason that a pretty story is interwoven about the comedian and his assistants, which is suited to their personalities and tends to hold interest from beginning to end.

In producing these comedies the aim seems to be more at "quiet entertainment" than spontaneous laughter. And it is for this reason that the appealing value may not be so strong to patrons of the smaller houses. Among the elite they should easily entertain, provided the story and action is interesting.

In "Greek Meets Greek" Boland plays the role of a studious young fellow named Xenophon Socrates O'Brien who cannot understand the modern dance.

He censures the girls for their modern ways and tells them that the ancient Greeks were more graceful and entertaining. The maidens take the cue, appropriate all the linen they can find in the house and appear on the lawn as classic dancers. A professor of the "shimmy dance" is introduced to instruct them in this art. His lessons seem to confuse rather than instruct and the dance ends in a "merry-go-round" with Boland who has bedecked himself in Greek costume, in a state of collapse.

The star is amusing in his role and is ably assisted by the girls who inject plenty of action into the scenes.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Business of Camping"

(Robert Bruce Scenic)

THIS one-reeler compares the methods of the old time "camper" who trod the wilds with his famous "knapsack" slung on his back, to the modern traveler who enters the woods fully equipped, riding on horseback and accompanied by pack animals.

The old-timer is shown plowing his way over hill and dale until at eventide, weary but full of the joys of life, he camps on the shores of a beautiful lake and cooks his supper of the four Bees-beans, bacon, bread and buckwheat cakes.

The modern camper travels with all the [illegible] cooking utensils are all packed in neat cases, a "place for everything" being found and in order to save space many of the articles fold up in minute packages.

The exterior shots of the great outdoors with the campers going through their routine arouses interest and should please all those who love nature and its wonderful life giving properties. —FRANK LEONARD.

Movie Chat Number Nineteen

(Urban)

SEE this chat about the multitudes of turkey, duck, chicken, lamb, old, young, and promised, then start an argument as to why the continued so-called scarcity in food. In one shot there are enough rabbits shown in a sort of pen to feed Greater New York for a week. And turkeys flock along which seem never to have heard of Thanksgiving Day or Christmas. Then there is one shot that will please the juvenile—showing thousands of baby chicks getting ready to grow with a view to feeding the world, judging from the number before the camera. One never cares so much for a drove of hogs unless one has raised them and about to market the costly ham and bacon. There are enough to provide breakfast meats and roast of pork for the army and navy, in one pen. There are a few words said in pictures of the keel of an ocean "Greyhound" enduring toward Belfast—and the Isle of Man. Interest holds throughout.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Their Company Came"—"Art Is Everything"

(Chester Scenic)

MANY interesting views of the fly and the danger which lurks in his path are brought out in the first half of this reel.

From the moment the mother fly lays her eggs in a garbage can to the time her offsprings take to the wing and grow to maturity—all is pictured.

The views are taken in magnified form and one cannot help but follow with interest the various stages of the flies life.

His wings, tongue, head, eyes and legs are all pictured and then a very important scene shows the danger to which human beings are subjected by this infectious insect.

For contrast the second part of the reel pictures Santiago, Chili, in its modern state. It is really amazing to view the way this city has grown within the last decade with its wonderful buildings, well laid out streets and its up to date inhabitants.

The reel is instructive and interesting.—FRANK LEONARD

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last seventeen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to August 28, 1920.

"MIDSUMMER MADNESS"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Perfectly Constructed Picture Stamps De Mille as Master Director

THE De Mille brothers are giving the screen some fine studies in the silent art and are placing the photoplay on a truly artistic plane. Cecil has proven his ability time and again. But it has taken "Midsummer Madness" for William De Mille to show his qualities of showmanship and artistic appreciation. He has taken a more or less conventional story and made it palpitate with life. He plays upon the heart strings much after the manner of a Kreisler, because he is endowed with an emotional temperament. But as skillful as he has shown himself to be in humanizing a story, his ability to construct dramatic sequences and dovetail them together stamps him as an exceptional technician.

"Midsummer Madness" is the most perfectly built picture that has ever been flashed on the screen. The whole structure—the incidents, the action—these move with remarkable precision. And not a superfluous note mars the offering from inception to conclusion. Olga Printzlau, the scenarist, deserves a great deal of this credit. If she is responsible for the titling then she should take equal credit with De Mille. Titles can make or break a picture. Those incorporated here have a definite place and carry the action along with faultless tempo.

The triangle formed from a husband, his wife, and his friend is given a life like representation. The sympathy for the wives is caught through the indifference of their husbands. The love-starved wife of one of them entertains the friend while his own wife is absent and the smouldering flame of passion find expression. They are about to trespass, but a realization of the impending tragedy brings them back to sanity. It is a rare scene when the outraged husband and the other's wife give utterance to their suspicions. The quarrel is dynamic in its force and is splendidly executed. They are in the music room and when they hear the servants approaching they change the subject until they are alone again. The pent-up expressions of the quartette are significant. Indeed a rare touch. This is only a sample of the inspired direction. The scene of the hunting lodge where the trespassers go with sin in their hearts is also rich in its artistic development. The sole humorous touch is when the caretaker, excellently played by Charles Ogle, discovers them and starts the epidemic of gossip which eventually reaches the wronged parties.

De Mille has given emphasis to the dramatic side and has left the spectacular alone. As a result the picture presents the most direct line of continuity ever shown. The picture is excellently staged and actel. Jack Holt, as the indifferent husband, and Conrad Nagel, as the philanderer, give performances in an even key of understanding and feeling. Lila Lee surpasses herself as the outraged wife. Her portrayal will surprise many who thought her incapable of emotion. Lois Wilson acts with admirable force and restraint. The supporting players are equally good in minor roles. "Midsummer Madness" is a sample of how good direction can make a picture. It should go big everywhere.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Midsummer Madness" is the attraction which will appear at the ———— theatre next ————. This is a William De Mille production, adapted by Olga Printzlau from Cosmo Hamilton's story, "His Friend and His Wife." It is a tale which takes the form of a domestic drama and involves two married couples. One husband is indifferent to his wife's appeal for love and romance; the other husband is a philanderer. Both wives would continue to bask in the radiance of the courtship days. Finally Meredith is called away and his best friend, Osborn, suddenly realizes that Margaret Meredith is uncommonly beautiful. His own wife being absent, he forgets his marital vows; forgets everything in his mad desire to conquer Margaret with passion.

They are about to trespass when sanity returns. The sin that was in their hearts is eliminated. Their rash act precipitates a situation which almost spells disaster for two families. But Margaret doesn't spare herself. And Meredith is willing to believe her and his friend that their weakness was only of the moment. Prominent in the cast are Jack Holt, Conrad Nagel, Lila Lee and Lois Wilson. Each gives a fine performance.

PROGRAM READER

William De Mille's master picture, "Midsummer Madness," will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. This is an occasion to see the greatest photoplay of the year—a photoplay which is marked for its vital theme, its rugged characterization, its compact arrangement of scenes and its forceful acting. It is a motion picture without a flaw. Manager ———— feels that he is giving his patrons a rare treat in this master play. It is an adaptation of Cosmo Hamilton's story, "His Friend and His Wife," and is wonderfully acted by Jack Holt, Lila Lee, Conrad Nagel, Charles Ogle and Lois Wilson.

"POLLY WITH A PAST"
(Metro)

Ina Claire's Rare Artistry Makes Her a Welcome Screen Figure

WHEN Metro bought the screen rights to "Polly With a Past" and induced Ina Claire to play her original role, it scored a ten strike. Not that the stage success is duplicated upon the silver sheet since it doesn't offer the comedy and variety expected, but because Miss Claire brings to the film public a rare art, a vivid and vital personality and a wholesomeness and charm—qualities which should take her to the highest peak of popularity. She has an individuality, a unique style, and magnetism possessed by few stars. Given the proper stories, she is destined to rise to the heights.

A finer flash of comedy talent has never been witnessed upon the screen. She is a mistress of many moods and can express pathos with the ability of a Chaplin. Miss Claire is the dominant factor of "Polly With a Past." With a less capable actress the picture might have a difficult time getting over. It doesn't depict much action or incident and really follows a single groove. Of course its sparkling dialogue could not be translated. But Miss Claire's performance is duplicated. It is well that she dominates every scene. One cannot say that the picture is talky; its only fault is its lack of variety.

The idea moves around a country girl who is blessed with enough resourcefulness and imagination to take advantage of her opportunities. Having a great sense of humor, it is her task to pose as a spirited French coquette in order to make the hero's fiancee jealous and so arouse the latter's fading enthusiasm. And she is the best interpreter of the Parisian coquette that the stage and screen have ever seen. It is a delight to watch her gestures, poses and mannerisms. Her study is so vital and vivid that the other players seem stilted. Clifton Webb is good when he isn't attempting to make broad farce out of gentle comedy. One or two of the players seem miscast. Louiszita Valentine hasn't made the most of her role. Director Karger has given the picture a handsome setting, the exteriors and interiors fitting splendidly into the scheme of things. Adequate lighting also places the players to advantage.

While "Polly With a Past" doesn't hit its stage stride, it is a very acceptable feature and should score a success with such exceptional acting as offered by Ina Claire. Superlatives are in order as far as she is concerned. Having quite a reputation the picture should attract the public. It is sumptuously mounted.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

That famous stage success, "Polly With a Past," in which Ina Claire scored such a decided hit, has been made into a picture that will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— with Miss Claire in her identical role. Written by two of the ablest playwrights of the day, George Middleton and Guy Bolton, it serves to introduce the star in a sort of a dual role.

Miss Claire is a country girl who, blessed with imagination and an education, migrates to the city where her good sense of humor and resourcefulness place her in peculiar circumstances. She learns that a love-sick youth has become despondent because of his fiance's indifference, so she resolves to arouse the young woman's jealousy by posing as a French coquette deeply in love with the youth. She plays the game with considerable zest but the youth discovers that his love for the fiance has grown cold in the infatuation he feels for the charming masquerader. The picture gives Miss Claire ample opportunity to flash her unique style, her vital and vivid touches. The supporting cast is good and the direction is high-class. The feature is lavishly mounted.

PROGRAM READER

"Polly With a Past" is coming. The opportunity is presented for patrons of the ———— theatre to witness the most skilful comedienne of the stage, Ina Claire, in her original role—the role she created and played for over a year. The play scored a sensation upon the stage and as a picture is said to surpass itself in entertaining possibilities. The appearance of Miss Claire is sufficient to attract every patron of the ————. She is a new personality and a welcome one. You will all declare that she is gifted. "Polly With a Past" will be the attraction at the ———— next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have a new star to exploit. And don't be afraid to go the limit. If your crowd is unfamiliar with her name don't mince matters in declaring her to be the greatest comedienne that ever played upon the screen. You can make this broad statement without fear of making a bone play. Use stills of her. Tell that she is a star on Broadway right now in "The Gold Diggers." Bill her to the limit. Tell that "Polly With a Past" made her one of the greatest favorites on the stage. Tell that she is destined to great popularity upon the screen. Mention the other players. Mention also that Maxwell Karger is the director. Treat your copy in a humorous fashion. Play up its long run on the stage.

CATCH LINES

See Ina Claire in "Polly With a Past." An exceptional comedienne in a rare comedy. You will be delighted with this star.

"GIRL OF MY HEART"
(Fox)

Star Fails to Enliven Very Dull Story

NO one can accuse Shirley Mason of lacking in pep, but it would take a far greater amount of vivacity and personality than she or any other star possesses to make this very improbable, trite story, filled as it is with conventional action, more than slightly interesting. There is practically no suspense throughout, and shortly after the opening incident the story shifts to the West where a "bad Indian" is introduced. From then on it is hackneyed incident as we watch the Indian and the bootlegging villain trying to kill the hero and abduct the star.

Miss Mason starts off as a "slavey" who runs away from a cruel mistress on Christmas eve and is taken into the mansion of the family. White's doctor has told him that he cannot live and the young man is about to kill himself when the little runaway appears. Impressed by her faith in the Almighty, he adopts her and she accompanies him to the West where he endeavors to regain his health. Then comes the Indian and the bootlegger, who supplies firewater to the redman. Another character introduced is a hermit doctor who for some unknown reason is hermiting in the mountains. When the hero is injured by the Indian, the hermit is induced by the star to come to his aid. The doctor gives him up, and when he recovers, is forced to admit his belief in God. The climax comes with the stealing of the star, who is bound with a stout rope in true serial style and breaks away in the good old movie fashion.

Miss Mason cannot impress here as she does in her other pictures. It is a part that might be played by almost any ingenue. It is practically a reversion to the old-time movie thriller, dressed up with some good photography. The sand storm scenes in the end are well enough done, but at best they do not prove gripping to any great degree.

Raymond McKee is opposite the star, but there is no drama in the picture so he cannot impress much. If you have a cheaper class of patrons they may be satisfied with this, but it is not up to the star's standard in heart interest or humor.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Shirley Mason, the petite Fox star, will appear in an attractive role in "Girl of My Heart," which will be the feature picture at the ———— theatre on ————. Miss Mason, a New York girl, is one of the youngest and most fascinating of all screen stars. She has risen from the ranks and has been in pictures since the days of the crude two-reeler. Miss Mason probably is partially responsible for the bobbed hair craze. For few who see her can fail to realize how attractive one can look in neatly cut hair.

The star's previous work has endeared her to many picture fans in this city. Starting in "Her Elephant Man" she has made a series of pictures for Fox Film Corp., which have proved her worth. Also in "Treasure Island," the picturesque screen version of Robert Louis Stevenson's immortal work, she played the role of Jim Hawkins.

"Girl of My Heart" is romance and thrills combined. It is a story of a little orphan girl who restored the faith of a despairing young millionaire. Besides the romance there is action from beginning to end, with a stirring climax laid in the Western desert. Such well known players as Raymond McKee and Al Fremont support the star.

The picture will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days.

PROGRAM READER

For years it had been a tradition in the White homestead that on Christmas eve they should leave the door of their mansion open to welcome any stray Christmas guest. For years no one had ever crossed the threshold but on this Christmas eve a little stranger came from out of the storm. Her name was Joan and she was a product of a charitable institution. In real life her name is Shirley Mason and she is a screen star and a product of the school of experience. "Girl of My Heart" is the name of the picture and it will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

"Girl of My Heart" is an apt title for any production starring Miss Mason, as those who are familiar with her former pictures, will soon agree. None more dainty, more whimsical, more fascinating, than this little bundle of feminine loveliness. You who remember her from her former pictures will not miss "Girl of My Heart." You others come and make her acquaintance. You will not regret it.

SUGGESTIONS

You can promise them more action in this one than in other Shirley Mason features. In the latter half it takes on the aspect of a real old-time western. Of course this should be subordinated to boosting the star. If you have shown her other pictures, she will already be well known. If this is your first, but you have screened "Treasure Island," mention this, for the star will be remembered from her work in this picture. The story is adapted from Frances Marion Mitchell's novel "Joan of Rainbow Springs," which never developed into a best seller. If you show this in the holiday season do not neglect the Christmas setting which is the opening incident in the picture.

CATCH LINES

A story of a little nobody who has only one gift—faith. Shirley Mason in a story of sweet romance mingled with thrilling action.

"THE TESTING BLOCK"
(Paramount)

Sure-Fire Western With Star in the Kind of Role That Made Him Famous

BILL HART is at last back again to the role that made him famous, the good bad man—and in view of this there can be no chance, but that "The Testing Block" will get over. From leading role to basic plot, practically the same as that of "The Great Divide," this is a Hart picture. It has more action than acting, a lot of stunt stuff, Hart's famous spotted mustang, plenty of riding, a fight or rather a series of fights in which the hero licks his whole gang of outlaws, a pleasing romance, some fine Western scenery, etc. What more is needed for a sure-fire Hart production?

The star plays the role of the leader of a band of outlaws back in the frontier days who, after defeating each of his bandit companions in a fist fight forces a young girl violinist, one of the company of a strolling show troupe, to marry him. He then quits the road, turns straight, falls in love with his wife and she with him, but one of his old band succeeds in making trouble in his happy home by convincing him through a Mexican girl that his wife does not care for him. Also the wife is led to believe that Bill has tired of her and is planning to take to the road again.

The first four reels or so are rather ordinary, but the last makes up for all that has gone before. It is a smashing finish that will send any crowd that likes Hart out perfectly satisfied.

The star plays his role with all his old time dash and vigor. Eva Novak is a pretty and appealing heroine of the clinging vine type and the balance of the cast are good types and competent players. For those who insist that Hart appear in Western roles and this includes most people who are partial to him, "The Testing Block" ought to go over for his best picture in some time.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is William S. Hart's newest picture, "The Testing Block," of which he is the author and Lambert Hillyer the adaptor and director. The star has written six reels of concentrated rapid-fire action which is finely tempered by the elements of romance and sentiment. It offers the dramatic situations and the breath-taking thrills of the gold rush days in the California Sierras.

The star portrays the part of "Sierra" Bill, a bad man, who later develops a streak of pure gold. In such a role Mr. Hart is quite supreme. He has an opportunity of displaying not only his skill as a rider, fighter and actor, but in portraying a human being, essentially. He fights valiantly for his "darling Nelly Gray." Mr. Hart has surrounded himself with clever players, among whom are the personable Eva Novak, Gordon Russell, Ira McFadden and others. Mr. Hillyer's direction is to be commended for its straightforward action and the composition of scenes. The backgrounds are colorful and in keeping with the story.

PROGRAM READER

Beginning next ———— "The Testing Block," a new picture of the Golden West of the early gold rush days will be presented with William S. Hart as the star. This famous interpreter of western character roles wrote the story and he has fashioned a concentrated rapid-fire, two-fisted line of action. The star is quite supreme in the delineation of western character parts and as "Sierra" Bill, the bandit chief, he gives a performance which will live long in the memory of those who see this admirable picture. There are thrills galore, but these are all tempered by a beautiful romance as sweet as the plaintive old melody, "Darling Nelly Gray," which runs through the story like a thread. The picture is wonderfully staged and carries a rich assortment of colorful backgrounds. Prominent in Mr. Hart's company is Eva Novak.

SUGGESTIONS

You can bill this picture as a regular old-time Bill Hart picture—a picture which gives him a chance to appear as a bad man who finds redemption through love. Make mention that he is the author. Tell that he has fashioned a tale which is charged with rapid-fire action and thrills and which are tempered by a fine romance. Bring out with emphasis that the story is of the early gold rush days of California and that Bill Hart is a bad man. Play up the atmosphere. Use catch lines and teasers. The heroine's name is Nelly Gray. And the famous song of that name is that name is used as sort of a musical theme. So play up the son. Ask your patrons to come and see a story written around it. Dress your lobby and your ushers in the atmosphere of the period. Bill the picture as a fast-moving, two-fisted melodrama. Bill it as a typical Bill Hart picture.

CATCH LINES

See "The Testing Block," a picture of the Sierras in the days of the gold rush. See Bill Hart as a bad man. See a picture of thrills and romance.

Bill Hart and his Pinto pony are with us again. Come to the ———— and see them in "The Testing Block," a great western picture.

"THE NEW YORK IDEA"
(Realart)

Stage Success Not So Good as a Picture

WHEN a play is founded upon crisp dialogue which is even brilliant at times and which carries a suggestion of the risque, it is almost certain to flivver somewhat in a screen adaptation. "The New York Idea" upon the stage was considered an almost perfect play in the manner in which its unique situations were tempered by snappy dialogue which dovetailed every incident. As a vehicle for Mrs. Fiske it proved a decided hit. But in its screen shape it doesn't look so well. In fact it is quite ordinary since the most cannot be made of the dialogue. The director has been forced to make a production picture—one which relies entirely upon its backgrounds and the costuming of the players.

Technically it is first rate, there being a good composition of scenes, with the lighting and photography up to requirements. "The New York Idea" was originally a scintillating satire upon the principles of marriage and divorce as entertained by the smart set of the metropolis. This satire is missing and an extremely light comedy is substituted. A good many people residing west of the Hudson river will certainly give New York a black eye if they believe that what is represented is real. A capricious bride, who becomes piqued at her husband for his careless manners and his responsiveness to a gay divorcee, decides to have a divorce. The judge who arranges the affair happens to be the ex-husband of the charming "vamp." So the determined bride will marry him to arouse the jealousy of her rival. But at the altar she falters and the denouement shows the reconciliation of the first mentioned husband and wife.

The action is as mild as the pastime of hanging hay baskets. What was presented with a purpose on the stage loses its color on the screen. Still it will doubtless interest those patrons who missed the play. They will see the frivolous side of the smart set, even though they may dismiss it as a lot of "tommyrot." Such a sophisticated story needs subtleties and innuendoes of dialogue and exceptionally clever players. Alice Brady gives tone to her portrayal, but she doesn't have much opportunity to catch the spirit of the original. Lowell Sherman is good in the opposite role. Mr. Blache has provided a good setting. His atmosphere is in harmony with the high life of the smart set.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Langdon Mitchell's sparkling play of love and divorce as practiced in the smart circles of New York has been adapted to the screen by Mary Murillo and will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with Alice Brady as the star. Upon the stage the play kept New York and the entire country entertained for a number of seasons with Mrs. Fiske as the star. As a photoplay it has lost none of its sparkle and wit and offers an ideal vehicle for the expression of Alice Brady's talent.

The star plays the part of Cynthia Karslake, a bride who is deeply in love with her husband, but who divorces him because he lives up to such manly traits as leaving cigar butts on her dressing table and a willingness to respond to the advances of a charming divorcee. The complications enter when the judge who arranged the divorce proves to be the ex-husband of the gay divorcee. It is Cynthia's object to harass her rival by marrying the judge. But at the altar she loses her courage and returns to her divorced husband. The picture is sumptuously staged. Miss Brady is admirably supported by a cast that includes Hedda Hopper, George Howell and Lowell Sherman. Herbert Blache directed.

PROGRAM READER

She took exception to her husband leaving cigar butts on her dressing table. Such boorish conduct caused her to seek a divorce. But that wasn't the only reason. He took particular delight to be seen in the company of a gay divorcee. When the wife discovered this state of affairs she decided to marry the judge who arranged the divorce because he proved to be the ex-husband of her gay rival. Yet at the altar she discovered——. See "The New York Idea," a brilliant expose of the fast set of New York—a satirical thrust at marriage and divorce. As a play it created a sensation with Mrs. Fiske as the star. As a picture it will prove equally delightful with Alice Brady. At this theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

The best angle to exploit in this feature is the production. Don't detail the plot. It doesn't shape up any too well in picture material. But you can say that it is a good satire of New York's smart set in its marriage and divorce problems. Bring out that as a play it toured the country with Mrs. Fiske as the star and was scored a winner everywhere. Tell that as a picture it presents opportunity for Alice Brady to reveal her charm and talent. Play up stills of the various scenes. Bill it as a smart and brilliant exposition of New York's smart set. Your Brady following should find enjoyment out of it. Mention the other players. Tell that Lowell Sherman appears in the cast—his first appearance on the screen since "Way Down East." Bill it as a smart comedy-drama.

"WHITE YOUTH"
(Universal)

Edith Roberts Has Frail and Obvious Picture Here

ONE should not condemn a picture for its lack of action and incident if the intention in the first place was to keep it mild and subdued. It is our suspicion that the authors never gave any thought to injecting the requisite elements of drama, but simply relied upon fashioning a sweet little morsel which might get over with Edith Roberts giving expression to it. It strikes us, too, that they became so fascinated in painting the customs and manners of the French who reside in New Orleans and vicinity that picture ingredients were forgotten. "White Youth" is extremely frail and always obvious and simply tells of a convent bred girl who is reminded by a stern grandfather that she should marry the man of his choice regardless of her feeling in the matter.

The old gentleman has picked a man of his own age, but when the youthful hero rides merrily into the scene it is perfectly clear that the girl will show her wilful spirit by accepting him. By picking this aged suitor, the picture has a tendency to become farcical, but the players take themselves so seriously that this welcome twist is never developed. A good deal of the action takes place in the cellar of the grandfather's home and presents him at the job of drinking his wine. The stage is all set for the girl to be given to the aged suitor when she rebels. In the meanwhile she is locked in her room and the hero is locked in the garage. His rival will eliminate him in a duel. So a reel is given up to much nonsense concerning fire arms.

The conclusion shows the old man trembling so that he is unable to aim the revolver. And grandfather permits the girl to have her own way. This is a very ancient pattern which has not even the saving grace of developing the twist of surprise. Had the aged suitor been selected to test the heroine's pride and wilfulness and had he been a party to the scheme the story would have carried the much needed humorous touch. The players seem to have realized the shortcomings since they are guilty of over-acting. They apparently wanted to add a necessary punch. Miss Roberts is charming in her role, but even she suffers from unnatural poses. "White Youth" is just a program offering and will probably please patrons if presented with another feature.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Edith Roberts is the star of the Universal picture, "White Youth," which will be shown at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. It is a simple little story laid in the vicinity of New Orleans and depicts the adventures of a charming convent-bred girl whose grandfather is determined to marry her off to a man of his choice. Of course the girl rebels. She will marry a youth instead of a man well past the prime of life. But her grandfather is determined to have revenge because her mother eloped in her youth without asking his consent.

The girl wins her way and grandfather capitulates. Miss Roberts has forged ahead rapidly on the screen. Her ability has been observed over several occasions. As the little French girl she gives a charming performance. Prominent in her support are Thomas Jefferson, Arnold Gregg and Alfred Hollingsworth. The picture is written by Forrest Halsey and Clara Beranger, two of the ablest scenarists of the day. Norman Dawn is the director. The story is laid in settings of true atmosphere. "White Youth" is a fitting subject for the display of the star's wholesome personality and finished acting.

PROGRAM READER

She was brought up in a convent. And when she reached maturity her grandfather, in a little town near New Orleans, sent for her to be married. He had selected her future husband without asking her consent since he wished to punish her for her mother's sin of eloping in her youth. But when the girl saw that her future husband was an old man she rebelled. She sought safety with a youth of her own years. How she wins her grandfather's consent—how she turns the tables on her aged suitor—how she proves that a maid's mind belongs to herself—likewise her own destiny—is told in five reels of charming comedy-drama. "White Youth" is the picture and it comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Edith Roberts.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have played the Edith Roberts pictures you can judge whether you want to book this one. She has rapidly made a name for herself as a high-class interpreter of ingenue roles. If you played "Lasca" your crowd doubtless remembers her. Play up stills of her. She is your best bet in the exploitation of this feature. The names of the authors might mean something to your steady patrons. So play them up too. Mention that it is a tale of sentiment and romance in the French section of Louisiana. Play up its charm and appeal and romance. Use Edith Roberts' other pictures in the exploitation. Mention the names of these.

CATCH LINES

Edith Roberts, the charming star of Universal is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "White Youth," a picture of love and summertime in French Louisiana.

Exhibitor Comment—"Big houses first two days. Rest of week fair." "Fine picture which brought good box-office receipts." "A splendid picture. Thrilling. Fine acting. By far the best work Bert Lytell has done." "Had a big opening and average crowds during the rest of week. Fair as a picture." "Good both as to entertaining value and box office results."

RIGHT TO LOVE, THE (FITZMAURICE PRODUCTION-PARAMOUNT) MAE MURRAY-DAVID POWELL.....SEPT. 4
"Worthy successor to "On With the Dance."—M. P. News
Exhibitor Comment—"Second week's business complete flop. Attractions failed to please." "Ordinary story, but drew good houses. Picture well produced." "Was only fair. Miss Murray is an actress of ability, but the production was not up to the standard of some of her former successes." "Business very good. Crowded houses all week. Audiences well pleased. Booked for indefinite run." "Second big week Good business, full houses. Audiences like it." "An average picture and played to usual business." "Went big first week and average second week of run. "Colorful western with Fatty Arbuckle as feature star."—M. N. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very disappointing and tame. Just like hundreds of other Westerns. Those who liked Westerns didn't mind it very much—but they certainly didn't like it. Box-office receipts good, because they wanted to see Fatty in a five-reeler." Fairly good picture, but business not exceptionally good, due largely to the fact that the star has yet to make his reputation as the principal in a feature picture, His fame rests only upon his work in comedy." "This is an average picture but seemed to please the audience." "Fair business to fair houses." "Very good. Played it two days to big business." "Very entertaining. Fatty liked better in comedies." "As far as entertaining value is concerned, this picture does not hit the mark, though business was good." "An old rail fence built in front of the theatre attracted attention. 'Modern Centaurs' and Pathe News are unusual and helped put over the show with a bang. Average entertainment." "A Western melodrama of the old days, with specks of comedy. Plot a variation of 'Enoch Arden.' Lots of Indians, half-breds, shooting and cavalry, and not so much of Arbuckle. He should stick to the short subjects."

"THE FLAME OF YOUTH"
(Fox)

A Pleasing, Simple Romance With Shirley Mason

THERE is a stronger story behind "The Flame of Youth" than in most Shirley Mason pictures, and as a result there is more real romance, two interesting characterizations, and less efforts on the part of the star to impress solely by tossing her bobbed hair about, pursing her lips, and wiggling her toes.

It is a neat bit of entertainment with suspense to the very end. For there are two suitors for the star's hand and it is actually not until the final fadeout that an audience will know which is successful. The story is laid in Belgium, but there is no foreign political or economic theme to make it lose interest for an American audience. Rather the atmosphere, quaint and appealing as it is, serves to enhance the picture.

Miss Mason plays Beebe, a flower girl, seventeen years of age, but a child in experience, and of trusting, unsophisticated and religious disposition. Jeanot, the woodchopper, loves her, but it is the worldly-wise Parisian artist who wins her heart. There are some good romantic scenes here. The artist, impressed by her innocence, finds "he cannot do much, for he loved her so much." So he goes back to his gay life in Paris. Beebe, hearing he is sick, follows, and finds him in the midst of a wild orgy. Still loving her he tries to explain that it was only the differences between them that forces him to take this method to forget her. But she turns into the open arms of Jeanot, the woodchopper, and it is explained that someday, she may learn to love him."

Because the love of Beebe and the artist is so strongly planted, and because the artist's character is made somewhat sympathetic, the ending is not entirely satisfactory. Raymond McKee is the woodchopper, true to type, but having few opportunities. Philo McCullough gets a great deal out of the character of the artist. Director Mitchell has injected not a few natural touches in developing the character of the peasant girl. The star herself meets the more-than-usual demands upon her histrionic ability with success and her personality is as pleasant as ever.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the daintiest and most attractive stars of the screen, Shirley Mason, will play the stellar role in "The Flame of Youth," the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. Miss Mason is one of the new generation of stars in the picture world, and although still in her 'teens has already won a host of favorites by her work in her last few productions. Less than five feet in height and tipping the scales under the hundred mark, this dainty actress is the personification of dainty, whimsical feminine charm.

"The Flame of Youth" gives her the kind of a part she can play best—an unsophisticated, carefree peasant girl. The story traces the gradual awakening of womanly love in her child's heart. It shows how innocence can win the masculine heart when worldliness, and daring vampires fail. For Victor Fleming was an artist of the Latin Quarter in Paris. None was more blase, more fond of the gay, free life, nor more experienced in the wiles of the husband hunter. In the little peasant girl he found one who could win her way to his heart more easily than the most bewitching woman.

"The Flame of Youth" will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days.

PROGRAM READER

What is it in a woman that will most easily win over the heart of a man? Some say it is their seductive appearance—others their power of conversation. Victor Fleming was a man of the world, a leader of the Latin Quarter in Paris. And Fleming was attracted by a new type of woman. It was innocence that won his heart. For Beebe, the peasant girl, who sold flowers in the village square, had been brought up in the quiet atmosphere of a Belgian village. She was unsophisticated, simple and childlike. Who better could play Beebe than Shirley Mason, the dainty Fox star? Beebe is the heroine of "The Flame of Youth," which will be shown at the ———— theatre on ————. Straight entertainment is its aim, and it hits the mark. You will never regret seeing it.

SUGGESTIONS

You can always exploit Shirley Mason as one of the cutest stars in filmdom. This can be done without offense to those who think that they do not wish to see a sugar-coated story by telling them that the picture is a gripping romance adapted from a popular novel. This is even more so in the case of "The Flame of Youth," for it has more drama than any of her previous pictures. Robert McKee and Philo McCullough are two leading men who will be known to the fans who follow pictures more closely. The star's bobbed hair might win her some publicity in the daily paper if you could arouse some discussion in its columns over the present day fad.

CATCH LINES

Shirley Mason wears wooden shoes and looks cuter than ever, in a story of Belgian peasantry. One of the most delightful romances of the year.

A new kind of a romance with a new kind of a heroine. A clean, gripping, true-to-life love story. Don't miss the daintiest star of picturedom—Shirley Mason.

"HER BELOVED VILLIAN"
(Realart)

French Farce Adaptation That Falls Short in American Requirements

BACK in the days before our own crop of bed room farces had even sprouted this was a naughtly French play called "La Veglione." For photoplay purposes the naughtiness has been extracted leaving a slender plot based on French ideas of marriage with complications built up through a farce-comedy jealous wife, and a lie told that calls for others in order that the original fabrication be concealed.

A very reputable American cast struggles with the material with which it has to work, resorting to French mannerisms and slap stick tricks in an effort to make the offering amusing. Even so dependable an actor as Tully Marshall is guilty of overplaying in an attempt to make something of his role.

The picture for the first half reel threatened to be interesting from a plot angle in that the hero is shown doing things, that according to American standards would fall to the villain role, with the supposed villain judging from the type selected for the part, apparently the hero. However, it is inferred in the last part of the picture that the sequence referred to is only the French idea of what is fair in love; that double crossing one's rival even if he be a friend is a perfectly legitimate transaction.

In point of entertainment this will probably earn a few laughs from audiences that aren't too particular. Mr. Marshall does a drunk scene and the star pretends to be intoxicated, both sequences being rather amusing. The story is explained by titles that often overreach in an attempt to be funny and are also over abundant. They stage a masked ball, show some nice scenic settings, and Miss Hawley wears a number of stunning gowns. The title of "Her Beloved Villain" seems to be a misnomer. The only villain to be found in connection with the whole affair, according to our ideas is the party who selected the story.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Adapted from a famous French farce which was a huge success in Europe a few years ago, "Her Beloved Villain," coming to the ———— theatre next ———— with Wanda Hawley, the pretty Realart star, carries the spectator through scenes of rich hilarity and charming romance. The story tells most amusingly of a man who gets his friend to propose for him and loses the girl. It is the old Priscilla, Miles Standish and John Alden situation brought up-to-date and seasoned with a dash of wit and humor which makes it doubly enjoyable.

The role which is Miss Hawley's is entirely different from either "Miss Hobbs," or "Food for Scandal"—but gives the star plenty of opportunity. The director has given the picture a perfect setting which is in ideal harmony with the plot and action. The picture is said to contain elements which should appeal to every type of patron. Miss Hawley is supported by a very capable cast that includes Tully Marshall, Ramsey Wallace, Robert Bolder, Marguerite McWade and Lillian Leighton. Sam Wood directed the offering, while Alice Eyton wrote the scenario.

PROGRAM READER

Don't ever trust your best friend to do your proposing for you! Do that little job yourself or well—just see "Her Beloved Villain" when it comes to the ———— theatre next ————. In this latest Wanda Hawley Realart comedy-drama, the complications of the famous Priscilla, Miles Standish and John Alden situation are re-enacted, this time with a brilliancy of wit characteristic of the French. For this is an adaptation of a famous French play. The picture sparkles with humor and soars with pretty sentiment and is thoroughly amusing. It offers the star a chance to prove her versatility since it is entirely different from "Miss Hobbs" and "Food for Scandal." In the cast are Tully Marshall and Ramsey Wallace.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a pretty good title to exploit and you should be able to work up a good campaign with it. Tell of the plot by intimating that it brings up-to-date the identical situation in which Priscilla, Miles Standish and John Alden found themselves. You should know by this time whether Miss Hawley is getting over in your house. She should be immensely popular. Her beauty is appealing and she has considerable talent. So play up stills of her. Mention the other players, particularly Tully Marshall and Ramsey Wallace. Go in for atmosphere. You might stimulate interest by having your ushers garbed in Puritan fashion. Use effective catch lines. Ask questions pertaining to the idea whether a man should allow another man to do his proposing for him. Distribute teasers with these questions.

CATCH LINES

See the charming Wanda Hawley in "Her Beloved Villain"—a picture of a three-cornered love affair similar to the memorable romance of Priscilla, Miles Standish and John Alden. A bright and breezy picture. Don't miss it.

"Rockeries and Squawkeries"

(Chester-Outing Scenic)

THOSE who are interested in bird life and those who are not should find this subject interesting. It shows the night heron, one of America's most beautiful birds in his wild state.

The cameraman with the assistance of a professor from Bowdoin college has accomplished a most difficult feat in photographing these birds, for they are shown in all sorts of positions from "chickenhood" to maturity.

The opening scenes picture the vast flock as they perch upon the treetops and interest is aroused from the fact that the cameraman has secured many close-ups of the wild creatures.

Many close-ups are also taken of the young brood which the professor handles and even weighs upon the scales.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Isle of Desire"

(Bruce Scenic-Educational)

ROBERT C. BRUCE has taken John Curtis Underwood's poem "My Island" and given it a beautiful scenic setting in "The Isle of Desire."

The locale is laid on the island of Jamaica with its wonderful climate and beautiful scenery and brings out the author's idea of a "countr to dwell upon which is restful to the body an soul."

Mr. Bruce has taken particular pains to em phasize the important points in the poem, select ing some wonderful shots of the tropical islan and its harbor.

Many scenes in and about New York Cit are also used for contrast.

It will interest wherever shown.—FRANK LEONARD.

has booked "The Last of the Mohicans" and "The Yellow Typhoon." The Modern is showing "Heliotrope" and "Officer 666;" the Strand is presenting "The North Wind's Malice" and "Flying Pat;" while the Victory shows "Darling Mine" and "From Now On."

Fyhn and his brother-in-law, Robert Armour, are buying a chain of small houses in California from Los Angeles to San Francisco. Mr. Fyhn said that he already has options upon several theatres now and expects to close the deal within the next two weeks.

The corporation formally opened its new Indianapolis exchange at 40 South Capitol Avenue on Saturday, Dec. 4. C. C. Wallace is manager and Oscar A. Kantner exploitation representative. S. E. Kilfoil, special representative of the New York office, supervised the organization and equipping of the new plant, which represents an investment of $50,000. The building was remodelled at a cost of approximately $30,000.

Thirty-five persons will be employed, and facilities available for serving 325 Indiana exhibitors. The exchange takes over all the Indiana territory, which was formerly served out of Cincinnati and Chicago.

Zena Keefe was at the Colonial in person with her picture, "Red Foam," December 6 and 7.

Joseph M. Duskin, general manager for Fidelity Photoplay Productions, has arranged with Arthur S. Leavitt, one of America's foremost song writers, to write a special song for "A Child for Sale,' one of the first big feature productions to be released in Ohio through this independent exchange. Mr. Duskin says this is only a forerunner of the kind of exploitation he is going to give "A Child for Sale."

Mrs. Carl Miller, wife of the manager of the Strand theatre, Fremont, died suddenly last week, after a brief illness.

The Clyde Cook comedies are making a distinct place for themselves out this way. James Dunlevy, manager of the Strand theatre, Akron, had one booked for three days last week, and wired in to the local Fox exchange that it was going over so big that he wanted to play it all week. It was "The Huntsman" that he was playing. Mr. Dunlevy followed up his first message with a second one saying that the comedy held up splendidly all week.

Buster Keaton made more Cleveland people laugh last week than it has ever been given to any comedian before to entertain in a similar space of time. This was when he was the featured star on the entire Stillman bill, playing the lead both in "The Saphead" and in "The Scarecrow, with "The Scarecrow" showing simultaneously also, at the Mall and Alhambra theatres. Three first-run Loew houses were all featuring Buster Keaton at the same time. And results show that the Loew management had the right idea in feeding Keaton comedy to Cleveland patrons, because people flocked to see him.

Jack Kuhn, managing director of the Loew houses in northern Ohio, took a step in an entirely new direction, when he arranged for an entire Buster Keaton program at the Stillman. It was an experiment. A steady stream lined up before the ticket window during the week. Sunday's business proved phenomenal.
